EX-MAYOR NEWMAN, PICTON, DIES IN FLORIDA

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Pittsburgh, Feb. 1 (CP)— The marrying business which Mayor William N. McNair entered so blithely has given him a case of jitters.

True to his promise he would marry couples free of charge, he performed two ceremonies, But in a few hours he sent out this broadcast:

"I want them back here as soon as possible, because if they don't I might go to jail for 30 days.

"I've lost them their certificates and if I don't find them there will be trouble and those people won't be married at all."

Vancouver, Wash., Feb. 1 (CP) —Mr. and Mrs. Clem Johnson, farmers living here, have 22 parents and grandparents the same day.

New York, Feb. 1 (CP)—New York's oldest street car line—and said also to be the oldest in the world—was a thing of the past today.

As dawn rolled back curtains of early darkness, modern, all-steam-lined busses replaced the creaking trolley cars which lumbered along Oakland Avenue on a small's pace, hemmed in by increasing motor traffic.

Mayor Lagardia, city officials, veterans of the siege and bent on the part of the 4's trade flew well to the old trolley line last night in a ceremony pointing to the end of another chapter in the life of old New York.

New York, Feb. 1 (CP)—Skeptical New York is still credulous about the "groundhog" legend which says that knowing animal can prognosticate the weather by seeing his shadow on Candlemas Day, February 2, or not seeing it.

(If he sees it, he goes back in his hole for six weeks more of winter; if no shadow, an early spring is in sight.)

Two real ground-hogs (marmota monax) have been borrowed from the zoos to do duty in a special pen in City Hall Park with artificial burrows and synthetic tunnels, and scientists will observe them at noon on February 2 to see if they do, about their shadows.

New York, Feb. 1 (CP)—George Epstein, dental mechanic, went unexpectedly off the gold standard in his profession for a day with $3,700 of light pounds of what he thought was gold. In a Magistrate's court Samuel Gellman was held for grand larceny as the owner of what turned out to be brass filings. Epstein said a sample of the dust would have been switched as he made preparations to smelt it.

The sample was 14 carat gold; the rest was 24 carat—brass.

LEFT-HANDED MAN POSSIBLE WRITER OF NURSERY NOTE

J. M. Trendley For Defence Says Writing Not Hauptmann's

PART MYTH DISCLAIMED

Reilly Wipes Away Intimation Fisch May Have Written Notes

By WILLIAM A. KINNEY

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 1.—The combined opinion of eight state experts that Bruno Richard Hauptmann wrote the Lindbergh ransom notes was disputed today by the first defence expert and Hauptmann's attorneys formally disclaimed part of the so-called "Fisch myth".

Former intimations the dead Jacob Fisch might have written the notes or kidnapped and slain baby Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., were left behind by the defence when chief Edward J. Reilly during a recess argument.

Reilly held, nevertheless, to a contention Fisch, not Hauptmann, was the receiver of the fatal $50,000 Lindbergh ransom.

Trendley, handwriting expert, the chart prepared by Albert S. Osborn, chief handwriting expert for the state, which was used by Osborn and other experts to illustrate basis for comparing the ransom notes with Hauptmann's handwriting, ignored Osborn's testimony on the point.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 1—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's defence team today opened court by objecting to the evidence of eight opposition handwriting experts and declared Hauptmann was not the writer of the fourteen Lindbergh ransom notes.

John M. Trendley, East St. Louis, Ill., who qualified as an expert over objections of the State yesterday.

CANNERS MEET TO DISCUSS PROBLEMS

Will Ask For Discontinuance of Sales Tax at Convention

Wrestling with the heavy problem of how best to organize and to legislate out of existence through Federal aid, and involved and lengthy and detailed discussion of questions directly connected with the industry, representatives of canning concerns from points throughout Ontario, Quebec and Prince Edward Island, who met at the Hotel Quinte on Thursday afternoon will continue their labors when they meet today.

Thursday's afternoon session was devoted for the most part to the selection of various committees to deal with the more pressing problems of the industry. Following the election of the committees the convention was held more in the nature of a closed meeting at which members of the committees chosen were thoroughly argued.

Unanimously elected chairman pro tem. Edwin J. Nesbitt, Brighton, opened the meeting on Thursday with a reminder to those present that the convention should not indeed regard as one of the most important yet held by them.

"It is one of the most important in my 37 years experience with the industry. We have serious problems for discussion, but the man who has an opinion at this meeting and does not bring it forth for discussion, is not honest either to himself or the industry he represents," warned Mr. Nesbitt.

The canning industry at the present time, he continued, was in a good condition of its existence," he added.

With sixty or more in attendance on Thursday, today's registration will double that number. The committee on arrival of many late comers from outside points.

During Thursday's meeting a communication received by S. W. Tryon, Picton, of the Prince Edward Independent Canners' Association from Mr. John Weese, M.P., expressed the regret that official business made it impossible to attend the meeting. The communication assured the convention that any assistance would be given the industry by the Federal government.

The two victims and the hotel are shown.

Trade Pacts Founded On Policy of Protection Says Hon. Mackenzie King

WOULD MODIFY

Challenges House to Say He Said He Would Cancel Them

Ottawa, Feb. 1.—(CP)—Two items on Prime Minister R. B. Bennett's reform prop time come before the House of Common today, one having to do with benefits for industrial workers and the other a measure of assistance for farmers.

They are the Unemployment Insurance Bill, which stands for second reading and a resolution proposing an amendment to the farm Loan Act to facilitate and increase the extension of credit to farmers.

On motion of a private member the House of Commons yesterday began a review of the Empire Trade Pacts and heard Rt. Hon. Mackenzie King, Liberal leader, deny he had ever promised to cancel the agreements if his party came into office.

At the same time Mr. King declared he had undergone any change of heart with respect to the agreements. He was still opposed to them and firmly believed they had hampered rather than assisted Canadian trade.

If a Liberal Government came into office its first act would be to seek important modifications to the treaties. Then if these modifications could not be obtained it would consider whether it was desirable to cancel them or allow them to remain in effect until they expired and then negotiate new agreements.

Give Trade Figures

The debate on the Trade Treaty was launched by a resolution proposed by Joseph Harris (Cons. Toronto-Scarborough), and promises to continue for some time next week. Some speakers confined themselves to trade figures. Mr. Harris and Minister of Trade and Commerce R. B. Hanson for the Government, citing figures of increased trade as evidence of the benefits arising out of the agreements.

On the other side, Thomas Reid (Lib., New Westminster) cited figures to exa ty the opposite effect. He contended Canadian Trade had declined rather than increased since the agreements became effective.

He claimed they were hampering the government in negotiating a trade treaty with the United States, they had interfered with trade with other countries, that they were based on a policy of high protection and trade restriction and that had that trade policy of the former Liberal Government continued and the high protectionist tactics of the Bennett administration never been resorted to Canadian Trade would be better now than it is.

Making his first speech in the House as a Minister, Mr. Hanson maintained the agreements had

COURT PLASTER NOT TAPE USED SAYS J. LABATT

Defence May Make Claim Labatt Did Not See Kidnapper

EYES UNTAPED AT LAKE

Brewer on Stand Today is Cross-Examined by Bell

By Charles Nichols, Canadian Press Staff Writer).

London, Ont., Feb. 1.—(CP)— Probably because John S. Labatt confused an adjective and noun, the most unusual bit of his cross-examination came from him at the kidnap trial of David Meisner.

C. W. Bell, K.C., chief defence counsel, asked the London Brewery President if the covering applied to his eye to which abductors was adhesive. Labatt had said it was court plaster and Bell, in his cross, when previously referring to the covering had said tape.

"Was it adhesive?" asked Bell.

"No; it was court plaster."

"Was it adhesive?"

Labatt repeated his answer.

Bell repeated the question, adding "you can be as long as you can."

Mr. Justice G. F. McFarland suggested Bell meant did the eye covering stick to the eye.

"Yes it did, but it wasn't adhesive tape," said Labatt, and that ended the matter.

London, Ont., Feb. 1 (CP)—Counsel for David Meisner will seek to show that John S. Labatt, the man Meisner is charged with kidnapping, was under the influence of liquor when he identified Meisner as one of his abductors.

W. B. Bell, K.C., veteran defence chief, today told Mr. Justice G. F. McFarland he would show the middle-aged brewer was not discharged from his car last August by kidnappers, had his eyes sealed with adhesive tape throughout his captivity.

Several times Labatt has referred to the covering over his eyes as "tape". This was covered with sun goggles.

Under cross-examination he said the covering was "court plaster."

Defense counsel told Mr. Justice McFarland he would seek to show Labatt "is mistaken in referring to the tape as court plaster, and that he could say anything."

Labatt maintained he could see his abductors through an aperture between strips of the plaster.

Bell—"I believe you."

"Is it not right," defence counsel asked Labatt, "that business had been better since the repeal of prohibition in the United States?

PLUG UGLIES BUSY REILLY DECLARES

Men Are Accused of Interfering With Defence Witnesses

By William A. Kinney
Copyright 1935 By The Associated Press

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 1—Defence counsel, introducing the first of their expert handwriting testimony to counteract the State's evidence that Bruno Richard Hauptmann slew the Lindbergh baby, charged intimidation of the prisoner's alibi witnesses.

Edward J. Reilly, burley chief of the defence staff, said:

"Many of our witnesses have been intimidated by men—plug-uglies—who came into their cabins and claimed they were representing the State of New Jersey."

He expected to call several additional alibi witnesses, but "it should not be long before you can be sure they never would get here."

Because of the prosecution's tactics against his witnesses—putting them on their trial while still keeping them under relentless cross-examination—he might call no more persons to testify. This would prolong the trial "two or three weeks."

Reilly said the "plug-uglies" showed no credentials.

They warned our witnesses to stay out of New Jersey if they knew what was good for them," he asserted.

"I'll say this much: I know they did not come from Attorney General Wilentz or the prosecution staff, but I have a pretty good idea where they came from."

Fred S. Newman of Fred S. Newman this district has lost an outstanding citizen, one always solicitous of the needs of the community and one always willing to aid in any way possible and the strenuous life in service has probably tended to break down his physical strength making him an easy victim to the heart ailment, which he developed while in office. His civic, social and religious life he has ever been prominently identified in making the community life of Prince Edward will be hard to fill.

The deceased was born at Colborne, Ontario, August 17, 1870, the son of John and Annie Newman and received his early education at Moscow Public School. He served some years on the farm of his father and then took over telegraph and for some years was employed as station agent and telegraph operator. In 1894 he came to Prince Edward County and locating in Milford conducted a general store and grain shipping business. He left Milford in 1898, moving to Picton, where he has continuously resided. In Picton his business was opened and branches were opened in Napanee, Gananoque, Belleville, Brighton and Bloomfield but disposed of his interest in 1910. He then engaged in the wholesale grocery business but of late years has not been actively associated in the management of the business other to his only son, Clare Newman.

'Boston Tar Baby' Fought Seven Years With Eyesight Almost Gone

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—(CP)—Sam Langford, boxing terror known as the "Boston Tar Baby" although he came from Nova Scotia, was threatened with blindness today in the tiny room where he guards his eyes and the gloves with which he licked Joe Gans, Harry Wills and a long parade of the 138 opponents who fell before his power.

The 56-year-old colored ex-champion yesterday he would have to leave the room in Harlem's negro belt, that he has occupied for seven years, if he did not seem to be able to understand it, and only kept staying. "No, no. Never such a thing happened to Sam Langford."

TIME LIMIT FOR PURCHASE IS HERE

Officers Allowed to Take Any Action Deemed Necessary

Toronto, Feb. 1 (CP)—Time-limit for purchase of 1935 license plates by Ontario motorists has expired and police throughout the Province are free to take whatever action they consider necessary against delinquent purchasers, Hon. T. B. McQuesten, Minister of Highways, said today.

J. P. Dickell, registrar of motor vehicles, said about 60 percent of the cars owned in the Province are now equipped with 1935 license plates.

Mr. McQuesten was particularly interested by the slowness of car owners in purchasing new operations' licenses. "The number issued does not bear any proportion to the number of people driving cars," he said.

"We are not issuing any summons to motorists failing to display their 1935 Ontario license plates today, but have been instructed to enforce this law fully from now on," stated police authorities today in reference to the purchasing of 1935 motorist licenses.

All motorists seen driving vehicles displaying 1934 markers were stopped by either city or motor provincial police today and personally instructed to either procure their license plates immediately or discontinue the use of their vehicles.

No notice has been given out as of new 1935 license plates displayed on motor vehicles and expect that the small minority of those not having purchased their licenses to do so within 24 hours' stated the two highway traffic officers, Constables Jack and Ryder today as they intimated, that strict interpretation of the motor law had been ordered and summonses would be issued to delaquents tomorrow. No further extension of time is being contemplated.

ARMY CELEBRATES 51st ANNIVERSARY

Served by 75 Commanding Officers in That Time

The Salvation Army Anniversary to be observed this year will mark the fifty-first year of the Army's work in this city, and falls on Sunday, 3rd.

Belleville citizens have long supported and manifested keen interest in the manifold operations of the Army.

It is a far cry back to the publishing in "In Darkest England and the Way Out" written by the founder, William Booth, of Belleville and faithfully the organization has pursued the principles of the founder's social-charter, in ways and means adapted to the needs of every community of people.

Belleville has been served by 75 Commanding Officers in the local Corps since the days of Captain Hallie Reynolds, who opened the work in 1884. Everyone of these officers appointed have been devoted to the great object sought and laid down his life, seeking to seek and save the souls of men" exemplifying the work of Jesus Christ and His Apostles.

The local Corps has borne its burdens in social responsibilities where the gospel of "Jesuamuch" would dictate in the feeding of the hungry and visiting the imprisoned and the sick, aged, and feeble and rescue of the fallen.

The greatest work of the Army, however, is the saving of the Evangelism of the people. It has never discarded the old of the public mercy-seat, and during these fifty one years "numberless" souls have sought and found Christ. Another flaming torch of "salvation for all men" is all parts of the Dominion and some to the Mission fields.

Soul-stirring work is going on in the local Corps, and of recent weeks a progressive movement of Open-air meeting day-by is reported by Adjutant and Mrs. A. W. Martin who are at present in command.

During the coming celebrations Adjutant Carl Hills of Kingston, will be the anniversary guest.

Plan to Catch Alleged 'Lifter' Is Successful

Although the employes of a local drug store had carefully conceived plans to catch a suspected shoplifter, their efforts were thwarted by the alleged shop-lifter yesterday as she successfully dashed from the store in possession of a packet of 50 cigarettes, which she had "lifted". Employes gave chase, but the woman vanished as into the thin air.

The matter was reported to the local police department and a description of the shop-lifter passed along. Plainclothes Officer Isard, who investigated, learned, that the employees of the drug store had been missing large packets of cigarettes with regularity and had come to suspect one particular woman. A trap was laid yesterday and the "lifter" walked into the trap. Careful eyes were scrutinizing the actions of the woman and actually saw her "lift" the cigarettes. Immediately the proprietor of the store called to the unsuspecting woman, who became hysterical and made a dash for the door, successfully evading the employees. Later the officer apprehended the woman in her apartment, however, she admitted the "snatch" and offered to make immediate restitution. This was denied and the matter will be further investigated.

369 TRANSIENTS STOP IN JANUARY

A total of 369 transients were to afforded warm facilities in which to sleep in the local police station cell block in the month of January 1935, a marked decrease over the similar month of the previous year, the largest number to sleep in the cell block was 24 on the night of Jan. 5th., while on one of the coldest nights of the month, Jan. 26th., there was only one solitary transient slumbering at the police station. A variation of nationalities was recorded by these transients, although the larger portion of them were British subjects.

The average for the month was practically 12 persons per night. As the final night of the month rolled by, exactly 13 transients slumbered in warm quarters at the police station. "The fact that there is no soup kitchen or free meals given to transients in Belleville has assisted materially in their falling off in this city," stated Chief of Kidd in reference to the matter today.

When registered at the sergeant's desk each transient's name, age, place of last destination, etc., is recorded. The men are checked in by the police at midnight and again rechecked as they leave in the morning.

MUSIC LOVERS ARE JOINING UP

Concert Association of Belleville Now Beyond 300 Memberships

The membership of the newly-formed Canadian Concert Association of Belleville is steadily increasing. Last evening a meeting of the group-captains was held at the home of Miss Leslie Riggs, and the total report showed that the minimum number of 300 memberships required to bring a series of three concerts had already been reached. Trenton also has sent a request for thirty more memberships, and other nearby centres have shown a decided interest.

The artists available for the local artists' committee to choose for the concerts include the most outstanding and prominent Canadian and British pianists, violinists, vocal artists, and ensembles such as Ragnild Stewart, Ernest Seitz, Scott Malcolm and Reginald Godden, young piano duo of wide popularity both in the United States and Canada. Rita Dole and Naomi Vanova, particularly acclaimed in Montreal and Ottawa, Madame Jeanne Dusseau, soprano, John Goss, English tenor, Adolf Wasiliev, Russian baritone, Madame Jayce Hornjansky, cellist, Saida Gerrard, pianist, of the Mary Wigman school of dancing in Germany and many others.

The membership committee is making every effort to reach everyone in the city before the campaign closes this week. Admission to these concerts is by membership only. Direct application may be secured at the Chamber of Commerce.

1,000 Children Storm Theatre To Assist Fund

Pupils of Belleville schools turned out in large numbers Thursday afternoon to attend the free o'clock matinee at the Belle Theatre in aid of the Foundation Fund for crippled children inaugurated by the Ontario Society for Crippled Children in a province-wide drive to raise the sum of $600,000. Over one thousand juveniles, young and small, attended, and as they started the theatre after school the scene was a lively one. As the children could not be admitted until the close of the regular performance, a formidable waiting party had assembled ready for the rush when the doors were finally opened—and rush they did, straining to capacity the efforts of the theatre staff to regulate the human wave which poured resistlessly through the doors and threatened to engulf the ticket takers. Manager Jack Arthur, however, in his customary cool, collected and efficient manner, handled the situation perfectly, and everything was happily seated in a few minutes, every seat being occupied.

The program which consisted of an "Our Gang" comedy, and a number of Eastman features was very satisfying and the continuous applause testified complete appreciation of the youthful audience.

Thanks are due to the projectionist and staff of the Belle Theatre for their courtesy and aid in this worthy endeavour.

CUSTOMS REVENUE SHOWS INCREASE

Betterment is Indicated By Returns at Local Port

A noticeable improvements in business conditions in the Belleville district during January is reflected by the noticeable increase of $8,204.04 in customs collected at the local port according to the month's returns. During the month a total sum of $60,901.22 is contrasted with receipts of $51,997.18 for January of 1934.

"Conditions have improved appreciably judging by the returns," commented Lt. Col. E. A. Geen, in charge of the local office, today.

What Exams Cost Scholars in 1934

"I was just wondering how this was going to work out when someone will have to pay the costs of the examinations."

So commented Mr. H. J. Clarke, Public School Inspector for South Hastings when questioned in his Church Street office this morning regarding the statement by Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn and the Hon. L. J. Simpson, Minister of Education for Ontario, that examination fees were to be eliminated.

Belleville pupils, at $1.00 per paper, last year paid a grand total of $1,000.00 for Public School examinations; $115.00 for Lower School and $505.00 for Middle School. Of this amount $607.40 went to the Department at Toronto, and the balance went to the local Board to pay for the expenses. The surplus left the local Board was $68.95 after all these expenses had been paid it was revealed by Mr. Clarke today.

Trenton fees collected last year was $3230.00 of which amount $235.20 went to Toronto and the balance to the Trenton Board. $17.00 extra was also collected for the Lower School examinations.

Frankford paid a total of $74.00 of which $44.00 went to Toronto. A total of $11.00 was also collected for Lower School examinations.

This is the amount that will be saved under the new ruling. It is also pointed out, that a considerable reduction in fees paid teachers for conducting the examinations will be made following the ruling that all examinations must be concluded by June 28.

"It appears that a good many parents will be able to save considerable following this ruling," accordingly stated Lt. Col. E. A. Geen, Chairman of the local Board of Education following the reading of the new announcement.

Obituary

The funeral of Miss Mary McCormack took place from her late residence, 35 Henry Street, Thursday afternoon, at 3 o'clock many friends assembled in the home where service was conducted by Rev. Fr. Bermingham, pastor of Bridge Street United Church, who conducted also the committal service at the graveside in Belleville cemetery.

POLICE COURT

Court had been opened and all eyes in readiness to proceed when it was suddenly disclosed, that there were no persons to be tried. This rather embarrassing situation confronted the local police court this morning, when those to have appeared on minor charges failed to do so, who have not paid their 1934 poll taxes by their names, when called "Tax," stated City Tax Collector T. E. Ketcheson today. "In alphabetical order these late tax evaders will all be brought into court and must either pay this tax or suffer the consequences," said the Tax Collector, as he intimated, that there appear, they being rather complacent of action by their absence. "We have as was the case in poll tax delinquency fifty young men in the city quoits last year.

GOOD ICE HARVEST BEING REALIZED

Splendid Quality of Ice About Carrying Place

Carrying Place, Feb. 1.—Gordon Wood, local lad who is studying some headway in pugilistic circles fought again on the Airport boxing card last Thursday night, this time against a Belleville opponent, who gave him a real tussle for the decision. Another fighter who should be known to locals by this time is Bobby Visen, stellar defence man on the local hockey team. He also got his nod from the judges after a lively bout.

The good wishes of the community are extended to Mrs. Robert Dempsey for her recovery from an appendix operation several weeks ago. The Hardy family were down from Toronto on Sunday, and it is expected that Mrs. Dempsey will soon be at her home again.

Friends of Miss Grace Hazelton learned with surprise and dismay that she had suffered on Monday evening last a very severe heart attack, the most serious yet of any she has endured, which made it necessary to secure medical assistance at once. Dr. Stobie of Belleville was called, having attended her before, and after treatment the patient spent a fairly restful night. Miss Hazelton, who is employed at the Ontario Hospital at Whitby, was forced by heart trouble and illness to leave her work last spring and return to her home here. For a time she seemed to be gaining, but it was thought she would be able to resume her duties; but this sudden and severe illness makes her friends fear that it will be long before she will be able to resume. Heartfelt sympathy is extended to the young lady.

Ice harvesting began this week. The annual crop from the Bay of Quinte is being gathered in. With Mr. Vernon Westfall doing the trucking to the Westfall ice house, and with Messrs. Harold Herrington, Henry Harris, Louis Anderson, Everett Weller and others assisting, the cutting and packing is being carried on at a rapid rate. It is expected that the supply will have been secured within a few days. The lot of splendid quality, although those who are cutting had to go the Canadian shore at the end of the Murray Canal pier in order to secure ice free from weeds. Blocks sixteen inches square and thirty-two inches long are being cut, each section containing about two hundred and fifty pounds. This year for the first time in a number of years, Mr. A. A. Wannamaker is not harvesting any ice. Mr. Wannamaker has given up the fishing business, and hence has decided that he need not do so. No doubt people of the community are harvesting ice, although in a number of cases the thickness is not sufficient. Here, now a number who have already put away a large quantity of it.

Local boys went to Trenton arena on Tuesday evening for a hockey game and practice prior to their game against Co-operative Workers on Wednesday.

A good crowd is expected at the hockey club dance being held in the hall on Wednesday evening.

Mr. Frank Baker of the Second Concession has been under treatment of radio repair work to do locally of late, and a number of radio owners are finding it convenient to have within a few miles of them, an experienced man with an up-to-date testing outfit.

Heartfelt sympathy is extended in the community to Mrs. Robert Dempsey, whose husband died after a long illness at his home in Trenton on Wednesday evening.

Mr. Frank Baker of the Second Concession has been under treatment of radio repair work to do locally of late, and a number of radio owners are finding it convenient to have within a few miles of them, an experienced man with an up-to-date testing outfit.

Heavy snowfall followed high with snow have made the task of delivering mail most difficult in districts along the Mount Carmel route. On Tuesday, Mr. Dusenbury made the trip part way and was forced to turn back, while one day last week it was only with the aid of a team that he was able to extricate his car from a huge drift in which it had become stuck. Mail for Mount Carmel road is not now widely used in winter, and the bulk of the mail matter has salary while the cold months are here.

Mrs. F. J. Simpson spent Tuesday evening and part of Wednesday with her parents and wife, Mr. and Mrs. Ewart Hennessey.

Kindness on the part of Messrs. Orul Morgan, Lorne Bilder and Alf. Dymond has made it possible for Gardenville children to attend school quite regularly this winter. Some who have not been able to come to appreciate the action of these gentlemen in taking their cars to the station to meet the transportation problem.

Mr. and Mrs. Herb Smith of Smithfield spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Dusenbury.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Buchanan and family entertained company on Sunday.

I recommend it to every girl who is nervous, weak, pale and has lost the natural color and all pain as well as the nervousness disappeared." POISON LIQUOR KILLS 32

William S. Murray, director of Colgate University and a well-known scientist, examines the stomach contents of some of the 32 victims of poisoned liquor. The bottles of booze, which has made its appearance suddenly in New York state, has sent a number of persons to the hospital besides the 32 who died. Murray recently gained fame for his discovery of a process to isolate indium.

CARRYING PLACE TEAM WELL UP

League Standing at Present is About Fourth Place

Carrying Place.—Old Man Frost is having his calling cards again in the form of snowdrifts, frosty pumps that refuse to be worked unless coal oil has been added and inflamed as a result of his playful touches, and all the thousand and one petty annoyances that mark his visit. Last week while the thermometer was registering 72 degrees below zero up in Iroquois Falls, it was creeping down to 17 below here, quite a difference it is to be admitted, but none the less quite cold enough for most people hereabouts. It is doubtful if this season has seen any temperature within ten degrees of the low registered, but at least cooler. Most of those who live in country communities at least are exceedingly glad that such is the case.

Much to the disappointment of those responsible for the planning of a Hockey Club dance in the Parish Hall last Friday evening, a number of reservations cancelled at almost obliterated the roads and made further planning impossible. Accordingly, even though invitations had already been mailed to many communities nearby, the event was perforce postponed. The committee will go to the aid of the hockey team.

The winter season with its quota of dances brought at least one very enjoyable and highly successful affair here on the Friday evening of last week when Messrs. Stewart Chase and Frank Baker, of the Second Concession combined to present a very pleasant dance to the Hall. An orchestra composed of Redneriillans or near-Redneriillans furnished the music for round and square dancing, and until the small hours a large crowd tripped the more-or-less fantastic with extreme enjoyment. Financially and socially the dance was a most successful as any presented here in some time.

By virtue of its victory over the Airport Tigers on Wednesday evening last at Trenton Arena, the local hockey team now stands about fourth of eleven teams in the Carrying Trenton league, "About" fourth owing to the fact that with only games per week a doubleheader on Monday, Wednesday and Friday, it is hard to tell the standing of any one team for long at a time when their win-and-loss column is thus constantly changing. However, the local record at least can be given, this locals having four wins to their credit, first game against the Trenton High School Collegiate, next Smithfield, and won 3-2; against the Tigers, Norm Johnson was the individual scoring ace of the local club in their last game netting all three counters himself. The locals swing into action again this week against the Co-operative Workers team; and in view of the fact that the latter have yet to win a game, it may be safely said that the locals will add another win to their total. Yet it may be safe to say nothing of the kind, for the wins too soon; many locals of far as may win over the Airport, but they added a game or two to their line and gave the Carrying Place team a very real battle. Incidentally a nice crowd turned out to cheer our lads on at the last game and it is a certainty that they will appreciate it if local fans will continue to patronize the games, as it is hardly fair to pass over the last game without mentioning Bobby Visen, of Frank La Morre in goal. Without doubt he represented the difference between losing the last feat, as time and again he outguessed some speedy Trenton puck-ster, evaded the rather weak defence and sailed right into the goal mouth. The three lads on the line were quite impossible for him to check, Norm Johnson especially, when a Tiger defenseman sailed right in, left the defence free to him and Norm ace of a position to slip the rubber in on the other side.

Inspector of Schools A. A. Martin, of Brighton, will visit the local school on Tuesday of last week in spite of the blustering snowstorm and was welcomed by Teacher.

A. H. Wannamaker with his helpers have been busy during the instantly this winter on the maintenance work in connection with the new highway, especially at the steeply banked curve near Dead Man's Hill, where the road is to be needed sprinkled in the roadway to keep vehicles from sliding off the road. It is to be hoped that there is hardly a spot on the new road where the sand will not be appreciated. Messrs. Wannamaker, Alec Campbell, Ernest Wannamaker, Germain have been kept busy digging sand from the canal bank and drawing it along the road in the directions all through the winter. Undoubtedly the presence of the sand on the roadway has averted possibly fatal accidents, as many motorists, after having come to grief on the front depth is surprising and difficult to account for.

A carload of wood sent from the Hennessey farms at Detior arrived at the Carrying Place siding last week, and Messrs. Ross and Harold Hennessey have been transporting it from the car to their woodpile. The wood was cut, loaded and sent by Mrs. R. Hennessey, and is remaining at Detior until spring.

Members of the Women's Association met at the home of Mrs. Harry Sheldon in Cherrieville on Wednesday of last week.

After several months in the city Miss Marion Hazelton has returned from Toronto to her home here and will spend the remainder of the season at home.

Another city visitor expected home this week is Frank Maria who, accompanied by his nephew, Master Harold Harris, went by train to the city soon after New Year's. While there, a guest of his brother, Mr. George Harris, and family, Frank managed to fall foul of the Christmas 'flu germs and as a result lost much of his love for city life. Toronto has been swept by a plague of measles this winter, and he may be considered fortunate that he did not contract that dire disease.

Plenty of local feeling and colour went into the game between Smithfield and the locals when they met on Trenton ice a few nights ago. For months these rival teams had looked forward to this meeting, and there had been plenty of money put on the line too. Manager Will Ferguson of the Smithfield troops that Carrying Place "expected that they were to do his duty" for they did their best; but the Smithfield-ites, made up largely of Trenton fans, just as the locals are, gave them plenty of tough opposition. And when the Willis second-line, hard drive from left wing Bobby Visen, broke loose, it looked as if the locals were saved from dejection by the narrowest of margins.

Give her the energy that means healthy play.

MOTHERS!

Lack of growth
Lack of appetite
Constipation
Nervousness
Sleeplessness
Listlessness
Liability to colds and other infectious diseases.

ANY one or all of these may be caused by a common fault in our diet—not enough Vitamin B_1 and Iron. Scientists have proved this. And science has proved that what has been accepted as a well-balanced diet in most cases is lacking in Vitamin B_1 and in iron.

VIP Provides Things You Need in Your Diet

J. H. Fox Resigns as Principal Of Picton Collegiate Institute

Will Pursue Special Studies at Harvard University

PICTON, Feb. 1.—Announcement that Mr. J. Harold Fox had sent a letter containing his resignation as Principal of Picton Collegiate and Vocational Institute, to the secretary of the Board, came as a surprise to everyone, and is deeply regretted. The letter was sent yesterday.

In it, Mr. Fox said "For some time past I have been pursuing a post-graduate course in the Graduate School of Education of Harvard University in a course leading towards the degree of Doctor of Education. The requirements of this degree include a year's study in residence at the University. As by the coming summer I will have completed as much of the course as can be taken in summer sessions, I propose to enter residence at the University next September. In accordance with part 4, section 3, of my contract I hereby notify the Picton High School Board that I will terminate my position as teacher and principal of Picton Collegiate and Vocational Institute on August 31st, 1935."

Mr. Fox has been a very efficient principal. He came here in 1932 when scholarship, discipline and attendance were at a low ebb. Introducing new features has resulted in a high standard in every department.

In June 1933, the percentage of passes passed, particularly in examinations rose from 63.8 of the previous year to 81.5. In 1934, the percentage of papers passed was 87.7, and never before equaled at this Collegiate.

The class of 1934 obtained more than their share of honor in the calendars in examinations as that of 1932 before them. Seventeen passed in Matriculation. The increase was 138 per cent.

A bonus and penalty system resulted in punctuality increasing and the penalties, of which is evidence of the efficiency and ability of Mr. Fox.

Efforts may be made to try and persuade Mr. Fox to remain another year.

Yesterday the thermometer fell to 30 degrees below zero here and was never higher than two degrees below zero the day. Not in many years have we experienced such a prolonged severe cold spell.

DRIVE IN LONDON WILL BE FEATURE

London, Jan. 31—(CP Cable)—Two processional drives by Their Majesties through London will be a major feature of the King's Silver Jubilee celebrations. Although the route is still four months distant the Lord Chamberlain already has organized a special staff to deal with the immense amount of detail necessary.

The processional drives are so planned, that the first day the King and Queen will come over the northern portion of London, Next day they will cross the Thames and visit Southwark, Hefindsday, Battersea, and adjacent districts. The drives are expected to be the most popular of the jubilee events.

Every police force has been allotted a particular wish that the celebrations shall be conducted without undue expense. Reserves from both the House of Lords and the House of Commons will be sworn in jointly at Westminster Hall, and then proceed to St. Paul's Cathedral for service at St. Paul's Cathedral.

EMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

The Employment Insurance and Social Service Bill is now before the Commons and the Dominion as Premier Bennett promised. That the Canadian people will study it with more than ordinary interest they give no political discussions at Ottawa is to be taken for granted. While there are many matters discussed in the House which do not stir a ripple of excitement in the country because the people do not know the problems and because these problems are not of the kind which attract the public eye, Unemployment Insurance is of a different character. It touches most persons' pocketbooks, employee's, employer's, and the government's purse. It is also important as the first measure of its kind to be brought into Canada after a successful trial of a similar measure in Britain. In addition it is the first of the social reform measures which Mr. Bennett promised the people in his radio addresses.

The form of the measure has been given, with figures for the amount of the contributions by the worker and the employer and the amount to be paid by the Federal Treasury. These figures, we hope, will remain exactly as they are at present, is, of course, not certain, for they may be changed during the discussions.

The amounts of the contribution and of the benefit are not as large as in the United States plan but they seem to follow closely the figures which have been considered for relief during the past four or five years. Under the Canadian bill the maximum benefit is $20 per week per man, while those with dependents are beneficiaries to the amount of $2.70 per week for adult and 90 cents per week for child dependent.

The British system has been largely followed in the Canadian bill except for the smaller amount which the federal country is to pay. But then the Canadian Treasury is to pay the cost of administration. One commentator says that the payment of the cost of administration is the method used to save anyone any money as where money is taken out of government revenue there is not the pinch of economy that there would be if the cost were taken out of the insurance fund.

It is noted by those who read the summary of the bill that the Unemployment Insurance Commission will have the task of also trying to find jobs for the unemployed. It is said that this has worked out well in the British Isles for there are always men who cannot find jobs for themselves even if jobs do exist. Regional headquarters will be established to take up this task.

The benefits are somewhat higher than the British benefits, but this is undoubtedly due to the higher average rate of living in Canada than prevails in Britain.

There is a difference in the status of the two countries for Canada is not highly industrialized and Great Britain is thoroughly industrialized. This indicates that Canada would not have the same percentage of persons likely to fall under the dole as in Britain when industrial depression sets in.

The list of exemptions will be closely scanned. Some may think too many classes are exempted and that all should be made to bear their share in the cost of the scheme even if there is little possibility of their requiring the benefits.

However the whole matter seems yet to be in an embryonic state. The forthcoming debate in the House and the representations which will likely be made to the Government will make the bill interesting and cause to be indicated clearly the import of the bill and the trend of opinion. A start has been made at the solution of one of the most pressing problems. That much is clear.

THE WEATHER

The weather is behaving in a way which may eventually disappoint a number of persons to turn prophet and predict something along the scale of severity as marked the surrounding atmosphere for the most of the winter a year ago. Late January weather has been exceptionally severe except for the absence of storms. Nothing but cold and sunlight would appear to be the rule for the past few days.

Thermometers are more in the public mind and for that reason persons displaying thermometers in public ought to be satisfied that they are correct. There are thermometers which consistently are wrong when it comes to cold weather and these ought to be removed as worthless, at least for winter reading. One thermometer in front of a business place is always 6 degrees too low in very cold weather.

Even the indoor thermometer is more than ever in the mind. It has to do its ups and downs with as much agility as the outside fellow as both rise by day and slump by night, though the thermometer within the house does not touch anything like the depths of the outside register.

So far the severity, though it is making progress to low depths and very low depths of temperatures, has not been felt as much as last winter's. But it must be remembered that outside of the cold the weather has been fine. Last winter there were bitter storms along with the cold waves.

How far the present weather is affecting the rate of colds is not certain though there seems to be considerable influenza in parts of the country. This district fortunately has not had outbreaks of disease and it is believed that bright snappy weather is in the interests of better health.

Last winter about this time the severe drawn-out sub-zero spell had begun, which left few days without a touch of under-zero weather for about five weeks.

Meanwhile the thermometer and the fuel bin and the human nose will be the best indicators of the severity of the weather. These are the best guides.

A CODE OF RURAL COURTESY

Pedestrianism is by no means so popular in Canada as in Great Britain, yet the countryside annually attracts large numbers of urban residents, particularly those who are bent upon picnicking and camping and who flock into the country at every week-end and upon every holiday.

Canada's countryside is broader, much more extensive than that of the Old Country, yet there is just as much need here for the preservation of its beauties and for obedience to certain elementary rules of good conduct which people have a right to demand of picnickers and campers.

The time may not have arrived in this land for the "countryside wardens" who are being appointed in England and whose function it is "to protect, educate and help the public to keep the countryside unspoilt," but the appearance of many a favored picnicking spot after it has been put to use by thoughtless, careless and positively dirty frequenters shows that there is a great deal to be accomplished in this direction.—Brockville Recorder and Times.

WHERE BUILDING STOPS

Although Canadian building statistics from month to month show from slight improvement, as compared with the low mark, it is noteworthy that the larger contracts are mainly for public buildings. Few of the so-called minor jobs of any building activities related to manufacturing or other industry, and in most centres residential building has been negligible. In this latter connection, where building costs are low, there is little attraction in rentals. Of the situation in the United States, reported by the National Industrial Conference Board states that while building costs today are somewhat lower than they were ten years ago, rentals are a great deal lower.

"Ten years ago a man could put $6,000 into a new house and lot and could rent it for $360, or 6 per cent. of the cost. Today the same house and lot would cost him $4,950, but the rental income would be only $185, a net return of 3.8 per cent. To get 6 per cent. today, the original cost would have to be reduced to around $3,100, or about 38 per cent. below present levels."

That, adds the bulletin, is why private capital is loath to invest in new building. Unless rentals go up by substance there remain unshaken and whether in the United States or Canada the level of rentals is directly dependent upon business improvement.—Woodstock Sentinel Review.

EMPLOYMENT SITUATION

According to information recorded during the last fourteen years, employment has invariably declined at the beginning of January, the monthly statistics relating data to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics having laid off some 59,600 workers, on the average, between December 1 and January 1. In the years 1921-1934, At the opening of the present year there was the customary contraction in industrial activity, but this was on a smaller scale than usual; the workers released from the staffs of the 8,965 co-operating employers numbered 40,993, or not quite 69 per cent. of the average since 1920. The reported payrolls were reduced from 924,178 on December 1 to 883,185 at the first of January. This recession, besides being substantially below the average, was also the smallest on record for midwinter with only one exception, viz., January 1, 1934, when some 30,400 persons were laid off by the co-operating employers. —Toronto Mail and Empire.

WHO GETS THE MONEY?

Fines running from $50 to $100 were imposed upon four Montreal firms which were convicted of violating Quebec's minimum wage law for women.

It is Quebec's law that was broken, and if the people of that province think the punishment fits the crime considers have no way to appeal for heavier penalties, however much the offending firms may have undersold competitors who faithfully kept the wage laws of other provinces, calling for higher rates of pay.

If minimum wage laws are to mean anything in inter-provincial trade they will have to establish uniform wage rates in all the provinces. And if they are to mean much anywhere they will have to call for heavier penalties than those levied in Montreal. A sweatshop operator who gets off with a $50 fine, paid out of money taken from his employees, has pretty strong proof that it is more profitable to break a wage law than to keep it.—Edmonton Bulletin.

AT MORN

How bright, how bright the world is growing now,
I had not known that Earth could be so fair!
And every lark on every swaying bough
Sends up a shaft of music in the air.
Clear towers and turrets of shining sound arise
Until a viewless city up above
Is built within the jade and opal skies
Where dawn's advancing legions swiftly move.
A city built of song to greet the light,
An insubstantial city, yet more sure
To quicken rapture and to wake delight
Than marble towns which time's assaults endure.

MAE WEST HAS REACHED THE HOLLYLAND, if not, Strange as it may seem, and all that, as is evidenced by the story told by Rabbi Gordon, of St. Louis, guest speaker at a Zionist convention in Toronto at the Royal York Hotel, recently, as retold by Ray Lewis in the Canadian Moving Picture Digest of Jan. 26, as follows: Rabbi Gordon was extolling the beauties of Palestine, the old and the new civilizations one finds in that country. Referring to the modern city of Tel Aviv, he said: "There are four theatres in Tel Aviv, two motion picture theatres, and what pictures do you think I saw in this city? Mae West in 'She Done Him Wrong.' It used to be that spices came from the East, now we get spices from the West."

DAVID LLOYD GEORGE, sometimes called "The Little Welshman," and likened to that David who slew Goliath of Gath in the days before motor cars, high explosives and pink teas, has written a book, in fact four books, all about his connection with the Great War. Oh that mine enemy might write a book is a phrase ascribed to someone who thought in this manner to get something to annihilate the enemy. Lloyd George's book may or may not provide material for the use of enemies but it is certain to make enemies for the man who as Minister of Munitions of the British Government during the Great War rendered splendid service to the cause of the allies, and one who always insisted that high explosives were infinitely more useful in levelling trench parapets and barbed wire fences than shrapnel, against War Office fondness for shrapnel and other war material which had performed good service in bygone days. Lloyd George's description of the conduct of the war by Sir Douglas Haig is frank and severely critical—men whom the public had worshipped as men of iron in accuses of being men of jelly laths were—all of which makes his memoirs of war days in the British cabinet very spicy and interesting, and is bound to arouse a storm of controversy as to the conduct of the war from a British standpoint, and why it took so long to arrive at the determination that too many cooks spoiled the broth and the entire Allied effort must be concentrated and prosecuted under unified command—with General Foch at the head.

IROQUOIS FALLS with its new low of 73—on the map, not in the mercury, is receiving plenty of publicity, but not of the kind that attracts tourists to that delightful place, considerably south of Hudson Bay, in the winter time, and some of these tourist guys think that winter lasts twelve months in some parts of Canada, when as a matter of fact flowers can be picked in the Arctic circle in the summer, and sun strokes may be accumulated as far north as the Yukon. There are many, also, who are not aware that in the far north for several months of the year it is continuous daylight and anyone sitting up to see the sunset, if any, would lose considerable sleep, and meet the new day before the old one was apparently ended.

Garden of Eden to Flower Again!

Map indicates site of Garden of Eden. Picture shows area reputed to have been land of Adam and Eve.

By Central Press Canadian

London Feb. 2—The most famous garden in all the history of the human race—the Garden of Eden—is destined to flower again.

The land of Eve and Adam, the garden of the snake and the forbidden fruit, has been desert waste for 3,000 years. Within the next three years it will blossom forth, not with trees and flowers, but with wheat, maize and cotton.

British engineers, by building a barrage across the River Tigris at Kut (see map) will change the face of an area of vast land. The project will cost $5,000,000. Nearly 10,000 square miles of Iraq will be irrigated, between the Tigris and Euphrates.

Site of The Garden

In that area, according to both modern research and Hebrew tradition, lies the site of the Garden of Eden.

"I see it is trackless desert, completely without vegetation except in occasional oases and halt-mile wide strips by the side of the main rivers. But it is potentially rich.

When the irrigation scheme is in operation, the Bedouins will be invited to abandon their nomadic life and settle on the land.

To some nomad Arab will fall the honor of cultivating the land where Adam and Eve walked before the Fall.

Archaeologists have discovered that this region was fruitful until about 3,000 years ago.

All the trees were cut down purposely for fuel and building by the Babylonian inhabitants of that day, and thus there remained no natural method of conserving the scanty rainfall and river supply.

The Babylonians had an irrigation system. What happened to it nobody knows.

The Kut barrage will divert part of the waters of the Tigris in the dry season into the River Shatt-el-Gharraf, which is probably the stream which Genesis says "went out of Eden to water the garden, and from thence it was parted and became into four heads."

TRADE PACTS FOUNDED ON PROTECTION POLICY

Policy of Protection.

The agreements, said Mr. King, "are founded on the policy of protection, or restriction of trade, not on a policy of freedom of trade."

His government, said Mr. King, recognized the high tariffs being enacted in 1929 and 1930 and "made every effort we could to get an entry into the United Kingdom market. The Dunning Budget (of 1930) was designed for that purpose."

The record of the government, continued Mr. King, has been higher and higher tariffs and restriction of trade wherever possible. He quoted Stanley Baldwin at the Ottawa Conference as suggesting "We aim at the lowering rather than the raising of (tariff) barriers."

If the suggestion of Mr. Baldwin had been followed "every party (in Canada) would have been one."

A complete line of demarcation between the government and the Liberals existed, said Mr. King. The Liberals were not opposed to Empire trade agreements but they were opposed to wrong methods of negotiation, to wrong principles in the agreements themselves and to methods detrimental to the trade of Canada.

It was well known, said the Liberal chief, that the British delegation at the Ottawa Conference was plainly told if they did not negotiate on the basis proposed by Mr. Bennett there would be no negotiations at all. Thus a party which held itself out as a great upholder of the Empire ran the risk of creating serious dissensions.

"The fact is," said Mr. King, "these agreements are founded on a policy of extraordinary protection and extremely high tariffs. We feel if this country is to be saved at all and got out of the depression this high tariff policy will have to go."

Grant Britain Preference.

The Liberal policy was to promote trade with all countries, to abolish the extraordinary increases in tariff made by the present government, to do away with all unwarranted extra taxes on imports and to provide tariff stability through allowing no more changes by order-in-council. The Liberals would continue their established policy as to Empire trade and grant the United Kingdom a substantial preference.

"We cannot accept these agreements in the form in which they are now," said Mr. King, "without stultifying ourselves in all our policies."

Changes would have to be made in the Ottawa agreements before a treaty with United States could be negotiated, predicted Mr. King. And they would have to be changed before other treaties could be drafted.

"I have never said I would cancel these agreements," said Mr. King.

"Oh! Oh!" shouted several Conservatives.

"I challenge you to point to any statement of that kind," retorted Mr. King, but there was no reply.

"I never said the Liberals would cancel the agreements," repeated Mr. King. "I have said, and I say now, if we come into office there are features we would like to change and we reserve to ourselves the right to cancel them."

"I have every reason to believe the British government will welcome an opportunity to change these agreements," said Mr. King. "I think there is a desire in all parts of the Empire to have them modified."

The way the agreements were viewed in Australia was well known, said Mr. King. The State of Western Australia was seeking to secede from the Australian Commonwealth because of the high federal tariff.

Rev. W. J. Walker Addresses 'Father and Son' Banquet

Stirling, Feb. 1—Rev. W. J. Walker of Belleville was the guest speaker last evening at the "Father and Son" banquet held under the auspices of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in the church basement, addressing the gathering on a subject of tremendous moment at the present day, "The European Situation."

The banquet was formally opened at 7 o'clock punctually by Rev. J. A. Koffend who acted as chairman. Seated with the chairman at the head table were Mr. James Haggerty of Belleville, County Treasurer; Mr. Simeon Fox, county road superintendent; the guest speaker Rev. Walker of Belleville and the members of the Board of Managers. Rev. J. A. Koffend in his preliminary remarks called to the attention of the assembly the fact that in the Ward family three generations were present, Mr. P. T. Ward, his son Mr. E. T. Ward and the latter's son, Mr. Tom Ward. At the conclusion of the chairman's address Community singing led by Mr. William Dermedy was much enjoyed.

Interesting features on the brief programme consisted of a mixed double quartette made up of Mrs. A. S. Murduff, Mrs. Roy Eggleton, Mrs. Charles Fargey, Miss Jane Moffat, and Messrs. Will Anderson, Arthur Duncan, Ernest Cain, and Roy Eggleton; an instrumental duet "Marche Militaire" by Franz Schubert played by Mrs. J. A. Koffend and Mr. Charles Allen; a ladies' quartette composed of Mrs. A. S. Murduff, Mrs. Roy Eggleton, Mrs. Charles Fargey and Miss Jane Moffat. It was at this juncture that Mr. A. Murduff of the Royal Bank was called upon to introduce the speaker, which duty he performed in his customary capable manner.

Rev. Walker at the outset stated the problem confronting the world in general today is that in the striving for each nation to restore its prosperity, in order to have access to the world's markets, each is underselling the other. Hence rumbles of war are heard throughout the length and breadth of Europe while lowering clouds loom darker and darker on the horizon. Throughout all this, lies Germany the keystate of the old World occupying the attention of all nations. Going back some seventy years in the history of that country, it found the doctrine of the "Mad Monk" being introduced into the state, a doctrine advocating the superman both in an intellectual and physical sense, and an objective which has for years been inherently imbedded in the minds of the people.

At the conference at Versailles in 1918 to arrange for terms of settlement, the responsibility for the World War was laid directly at the feet of Germany which country was forced to accept the arrangements agreeable to the other powers. The result was that Germany emerged a crippled nation in the sense and one possessing an assumed weakness not knowing whither to turn. It was at this point that the Socialists might have definitely established a regime but they failed to take advantage of the opportunity and the famous figure of Von Pappen entered into the annals of the world's history. Following his election to power, the Hitlerite party came into being but following a second election, their heretofore increasing power was substantially reduced. The outcome of this was an attempt at compromising Von Pappen summoning Hitler to Berlin for a parley. To outward appearances, a successful compromise was reached between the Nationalist and Socialist factions, an agreement which was a definite lie on the part of Hitler. Turning this to his own advantage, Hitler spread about his labor leaders meanwhile being careful to weed out one by one the Nationalist leaders until finally both parties were as one beneath his domination. This reduced the ranks of the enemies to two classes, the Jews and the Communists, and to offset these, he once more reverted to the Mad Monk, forcing the enemies to sign pledges binding them to support his government.

Hitler having brought all within the confines of Germany beneath his sway looked outward for expansion. On the West Britain blocked the way, so turning eastward. He annexed the Polish territory, strengthening his hold with a German-Polish alliance. Hereupon Mussolini enters the picture, the Il Duce conspiring with Hitler for the control of Europe. Although thoroughly acquainted with the Dolfuss affair, Hitler pleaded total ignorance.

Mussolini, however, was dissatisfied with the German-Polish alliance, taking up the Austrian cause to counteract the previous mentioned alliance. Seeing these great powers allying with one another, Jugo-Slavia becoming alarmed sought a France-Slav alliance while Great Britain threatened in turn to reoccupy the German territory on the Rhine. Finally Russia and France united in a peace pact and with this final gesture, Hitler found himself hemmed in by allied powers and at the present day, literally has his hands tied as far as a possibility of war with his neighbouring countries is concerned. While he is a tremendous force in his own country, his influence outside is actually nil and in the event of his possible assassination or removal from power by election, only one of three possibilities remains: either Germany would resolve itself into a Communistic state, or revert to the old monarchy or finally become a union of the states of Germany. At the present time, Bavaria has intimated her desire to re-establish her kingdom as in bygone days.

Although the general unrest of Europe emenates from that boiling-pot of the Old World, Germany and its leader Hitler, the secret of the world peace lies with Great Britain. In that land we find statesmen educated to the office which they occupy and even though they have been gleaned from every walk of life, still they have been properly educated to their office, the speaker citing specific examples to prove his point.

"We a new nation, should cast our eyes eastward in an effort to emulate our Mother Country's example and beware lest our glance stray to the south of us," concluded Rev. Walker.

Mr. W. L. Anderson in a few apt remarks thanked the speaker for his eloquent and onstructive address Mr. Alex Fargey heartily endorsing this message of appreciation. Mr. Arthur Duncan moved a vote of thanks to the ladies of the congregation for their efforts which Mr. Charles Allen in a very capable manner seconded. The gathering then rose and sang "God Save The King."

The Stirling High School hockey team turned in its second victory of the week in the local arena last night when in a scheduled interscholastic fixture, Marmora went down to a 4-1 defeat.

The play throughout the entire game was fast for an interscholastic loop, each team working hard to gain the edge. In the first period, no score was recorded Marmora having the edge if any, on the play. Time after time the Northerners worked themselves to a scoring position only to fail to avail themselves of their opportunity to turn it to account. Burridge and Smith worked a neat combination play while O'Neill of the visitors also performed a beautiful solo. Stirling boys could not seem to get properly organized until the end of the period when they harassed Hollingsworth of the Marmora nets considerably.

Activities were begun in earnest in the second stanza, Robinson chalking up the first tally, Rodgers getting the credit for the assist. It was shortly after this that Potter made a neat shot on goal which Hollingsworth turned aside only to have Dainard net the puck on the rebound. Marmora at this point launched an offensive attack, the Smith-Burridge combination proving effective, Smith netting a counter. With the score 2-1 for the locals the S.H.S. sextette set out to ensure the victory, Don Rodgers scoring on a Munro-Rodgers combination play. Marmora caused Sprentall in the Stirling twine plenty of exercise but otherwise that lad withstood the attack like a veteran and the period wound up with a 3-1 count.

The third and final period was equally exciting with Stirling having a slight edge on the pastime. The fourth and final goal was added in this verse on a Munro-Robinson hook-up, Robinson giving the disc the final poke. Referee Earl Wallace handled the situation to the satisfaction of all, and was not called upon to issue many penalties throughout the game.

Lineups:

Stirling—Sprentall goal; A. Rodgers and Jones, defence; D. Rodgers, centre; Robinson and Munro, wings; Alternates, Potter, Morton, Sutherland and Dainard.

Marmora—Hollingsworth, goal; O'Neill and Smith, defence; Burridge, centre; Loveless and Kouri, wings. Alternates, Hart and McColl.

"DOG AND DEER"

Dog and No Deer is Correct

"To the Editor of The Ontario Intelligencer,

"The opening of the Session at Queen's Park is at hand, The Hon. Mr. Nixon, and Mr. Taylor, (Deputy) Ministers of Game and Fisheries, say they are going to lift the ban on dogs for hunting deer and this is certainly a retrograde step.

Is there any other province in the Dominion, or State in the Union, where dogs are allowed? I am told, not.

"The writer had just finished taking a "Straw Vote" on this question in this community, covering a part of four townships in this Parry Sound District, I attached my affidavit to the list of voters to show that the vote was taken in a fair and proper manner, and I sent the list, together with a letter, to the Honorable Mitchell Hepburn, but in his absence my letter and vote was handed to Mr. Nixon, who is a strong pro dog hunter and I presume he consigned it to the scrap basket.

The result of the vote was as follows:—

"For the dog.... 17
"Against the dog.... 103
"Total 120

"All but, about 5 or 6 of the above were deer hunters and we took every settler as we came to them.

"It's a great mystery to me why we are paying a bounty on wolves to protect our deer, and not paying a bounty on hounds, when they both do the very same thing in season and out of season. There is absolutely no difference.

"From my 45 years experience right here in Parry Sound District, working and hunting in the bush every Fall and Winter right amongst the deer, I have been an eye witness many times to the slaughter of deer by worthless hounds running at large.

"Since the dogs were stopped three years ago most people around here have got rid of their hounds and it's a great relief not only to the deer but also to the sheep.

The deer are slightly on the increase through the more settled parts of the south half of this district since the dogs have been stopped.

To bring the dogs back is suicide to the deer, and is just to gratify the personal desire of a very small minority of hunters.

"In New York State they are going to feed their deer this winter on food cakes, while our law makers are going to feed our deer on real live "Hot Dogs".

"There is absolutely no argument in favor of dogs. If anyone thinks so let him accept the following challenge. I challenge (single handed) any two men in this province to a proper debate on this question, either on points or on the merits of the argument, "Days should speak and Multitude of Years should teach wisdom." Job 32-7. The birthday speeches of the grand old man, Sir William Mullock proves this statement.

"The trouble with the younger generation as I see it, they are too much for sport, slaughter and waste. They need more lessons on economy.

SLEEPLESS WITH RHEUMATISM

Her Back Felt as if it Would Break

A FEW WEEKS OF KRUSCHEN—NO PAIN NOW

A woman's gratitude at being rid of "such dreadful pains" caused her to write this letter:—

"I used to have such dreadful pains in my knees, ankles and shoulders, to say nothing of my back, which used to feel as though it would break. I had no peace, especially at night, but since taking Kruschen Salts for a few weeks only, I feel a different woman, thank goodness. I have no pains now. I feel much brighter and better in every way, and so shall continue with Kruschen regularly."—(Mrs.) M. H.

Most rheumatic pain and swelling is caused by too much uric acid in the body. Uric acid is composed of sharp, needle-like crystals which settle in the muscles, joints, and tendons, pierce the nerves, and inflame the tissues. Keep down the excess of uric acid from day to day, and it stands to reason you'll never have to suffer any more.

That is just what Kruschen Salts does—brings quick relief from the cutting, stabbing pains of rheumatism because it actually rids your blood of poisonous uric acid. Two of the ingredients of Kruschen Salts dull the sharp edges of the uric acid crystals, then dissolve them away altogether. Other ingredients of these salts assist Nature to wash out these dissolved crystals through the natural channel. And as they go, there's no doubt about those aches and pains going too!

Examination Fees Ended For Secondary Schools

Examinations Must Be Ended by June 28 This Year

Toronto, Feb. 1.—Abolition of all secondary school examination fees, including the charge for trying entrance examinations, was announced yesterday by Hon. Dr. Leonard J. Simpson, Minister of Education. The announcement followed a tentative statement to this effect by Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn when he stated that one request presented in a memorandum by the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada had already been undertaken.

The memorandum presented by the union delegation urged the abolition of the fees and the completion of all examinations before the end of June, in addition to the provision of free school books to children of parents who were unable to purchase them because of the economic crisis. Dr. Simpson was not present when the memorandum was read.

"We can relieve your mind on one feature," said Mr. Hepburn. "I can assure you that henceforth there will be no fees charged for examinations."

At this point Hon. David Croll, Minister of Welfare, pointed out that for the past four months municipalities have been authorized to supply school books to children and charge the sum to relief expenditures. At this point Dr. Simpson entered the council chamber and corroborated Mr. Hepburn's announcement, stating that it had not been before Cabinet for approval.

"Also," he said, "I may add that this year all the examinations in all the schools will have ended by June 28."

Later Dr. Simpson stated he did not know the amount which the province would lose by the abolition of fees, but added, with a smile, "We will have to try to make it up some other way."

Thorncliffe Fires Still Deep Mystery

Toronto, Feb. 1.—(CP)—Investigations into the two fires at Thorncliffe race track last December that destroyed a score of horses, have indicated no one connected with the track or horse racing had anything to do with the suspected incendiary blazes, Fire Marshal E. P. Heaton, said today.

"It may take weeks or months before the mystery will be solved. If there is a conspiracy, it is a very deep one," he said.

NEWDEVELOPMENT IN DIESEL MOTOR

Most Radical Feature is New System of Value Actuation

Saint John, N.B., Feb. 1 (CP)—Announcement a revolutionary development in automotive engineering had been perfected at Saint John was made today following the granting of Canadian and United States patents for a new type Diesel engine claimed to be stronger, simpler, more efficient and at least ten times cheaper to produce than any other engine of the Diesel type.

Karl Angel, young designer, began the construction of his invention in September, 1932. The completed project was tested the following January and found to be successful.

Its most radical feature is a new system of valve actuation. With an "air cap" in the cylinder head, the valves are operated by variations in air pressure instead of mechanical actuation by tappets. This modification has eliminated much cumbersome equipment and made the installation surprisingly simple.

A rush of cool air past the valves instead of flame, following ignition, prevents them from becoming distorted by heat, consequently minimizing overhauls. The engine has no exhaust valves, waste gases being forced through open ports by the downward thrust of the piston. An added feature of the "air cap" is its action as a supercharger, resulting in more power.

Angel was assisted in his work by E. R. Mellenger, technical representative of a Montreal engineering firm.

Of two cycle action, the new Diesel develops 21.15 horsepower at 850 revolutions per minute against a computed 10 horsepower at the same revolutions with a similar four cycle motor having the conventional mechanical actuation of valves.

Chamber of Commerce Plans Campaign to Attract Tourists To Belleville and District

That a carefully planned and energetically directed effort should be made to bring to the attention of tourists from the United States the fact, that Belleville is the centre of a large district in which many lakes in picturesque environment are located and in the waters of which game fish abound, was the unanimous opinion of the directors of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce at their regular weekly meeting on Thursday.

The subject was introduced by Mr. E. V. Illsey, who spoke enthusiastically of the benefits which would accrue to Belleville and the County of Hastings as a result of a greater influx of tourists. Instances were cited by him of visitors who had found at is were by chance some of the beauty spots in the northern part of this county and who, were so favorably impressed, that they now return every summer and spend several weeks and in some instances the full summer.

It was decided to add a publicity committee to the list of present standing committees and the matter of giving the attractions of this district the publicity which they warrant, will be thoroughly dealt with.

It was reported by the Secretary-Manager, Mr. J. O. Herity and by several of the directors, that the lectures, which are being given under the auspices of the Chamber are proving to be a marked success. Information regarding these lectures may be obtained by telephoning to the office of the Chamber.

A welcome guest at the meeting was Mr. Russell T. Kelley of Hamilton, the President of the Ontario Associated Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce. Mr. Kelley gave valuable aid in the organizing of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce some years ago and upon many occasions since then he has renewed his friendship with members of the local Chamber.

Mr. J. B. Boyce, the president, presided at the meeting and the directors present were Messrs. MacKenzie Robertson, W. H. Morton, W. C. Springer, H. E. Fairfield, Leo B. Rigs and E. V. Illsey.

How eclipse will appear

Promptly at 9:30 o'clock on Sunday morning, residents of this city grouped on back door steps and shielding their eyes with pieces of smoked glass already prepared, will have a ringside seat for the first eclipse of the sun visible in Canada since August 31, 1932.

Differing from the last eclipse observed in Belleville and other parts of the country, next Sunday's eclipse will be only a partial one—just 25 per cent of the sun will be obscured by the moon as the cut above shows.

Striking the continent in the vicinity of Great Bear Lake where it will be first observed fullest, about 75 per cent, the shadow will flash across Canada with awesome speed until it reaches Belleville at about 9:30 in the morning. From then on the shadow will grow darker reaching its fullest 25 per cent totality at about 11:15, from which time it will gradually decrease until 1:00 o'clock when it will be all over.

The eclipse will be just a forerunner of the biggest eclipse of the year which will be visible in Belleville on July 15-16 when a total eclipse of the moon, lasting nearly two hours will take place.

Amateur photographers of the city are already preparing their plates and cameras to catch a picture of the infrequent spectacle. Oculists and departmental stores also expect a brisk sale of dark glasses in preparation for the event. The old standby, smoked glass, however will suffice for the majority.

DOUGLAS ROAD is three feet under water at the end of the Still Creek bridge, as a result of the flooding of the Grandview Highway with Douglas Road. The householders now call the Creek "Still Lake." The Municipal engineers, Mr. Goodall and Mr. Bonthron, are seen here with his punt as ferryman, field and his boat are seen in the top picture close to a telephone pole. He picks up pedestrians on the punt submerges and carries them to the bridge. He also finds time to row over to the residence and feed his poultry and pigeons. The water in the left of the picture is empty, but the house in the centre has been moved.

"Do you know anybody who wants to buy an aquarium?" called Tom Gear from the porch of his home at the end of the bridge, shown in the lower picture. The bridge is the only dry land left in the district. Mr. Gear and Mr. Guests in his house are Mr. and Mrs. Gillie Robinson and Gus Olsson, summer residents whose cottage and home are badly flooded. NEW STANDARD?

Another result of the celebrations held in honor of King George's Silver Jubilee may be the changing of the royal standard. At Carnarvon Castle in May a Welsh celebration is to be held and the organizers have awakened the old Welsh demand for incorporation of the Red Dragon of Wales on the royal standard. At present England is twice represented with her three lions, and the Welsh plan is to drop one of these. Such a change, however, would involve tremendous expense — even the drums in the British army bands would have to be changed, to say nothing of all official seals, etc. Above is seen the proposed new standard.

Current Attractions at Local Theatres

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE REGENT
"Kid Millions"
Eddie Cantor Cavorts in Egypt in New Goldwyn Musical

Eddie Cantor, banjo-eyed clown who last year cavorted among chariots and lions in the Rome of the Cesears, in "Roman Scandals," this season invades the land of the camels and the pyramids in "Kid Millions," which comes to the Regent Theatre tomorrow (Saturday) for three days, matinee and evening.

The comedian's fifth annual screen musical extravaganza for Samuel Goldwyn introduces him as a black sheep of the Brooklyn waterfront who inherits a fortune in buried treasure and travels to Egypt to claim it, with Ann Sothern, Ethel Merman, George Murphy, and Block and Sully, lending romance, "hotcha," and hilarity to the proceedings.

The season's most tuneful song hits are a feature of the new Cantor fun fest. Eddie murders "Okay Toots" and "What My Ship Comes In," both from the pens of Gus Kahn and Walter Donaldson, aided by the new crop of gorgeous Goldwyn Girls. The first is featured in the elaborate Harem Number and the second in the Technicolor Ice Ballet Fantasy which closes the film. Eddie also revives "Mandy", by Irving Berlin and Ballin Mills, which Cantor introduced in the Ziegfeld Follies" of 1918, in a gag-packed duet and song number staged as part of a ship's concert.

Ethel Merman "goes to town" with Kahn and Donaldson's "An Earful of Music" and in the song Cricolnne Number Ann Sothern and George Murphy make a romantic duet of "Your Head on My Shoulder" by Harold Adamson and Burton Lane.

Arthur Sheekman, Nat Perrin and Wilkie Mahoney have collaborated on the story and dialogue of the film, which was directed by Roy Del Ruth, for release through United Artists. Seymour Felix staged the dances and ensembles. The color direction of the Ice Cream Fantasy is by Wiley Pogson.

"Rambling Romeos," a very funny all-star comedy with Bella Lasat World Events, and "Famous Fighting Men" will precede the feature attraction of the attraction, at the Saturday matinee performance only. Beatty Jr. in a picture of "The Lost Jungle" adventure play will be presented.

William Powell Leaving

William Powell and Myrna Loy, sensational hits in "The Thin Man" and "Manhattan Melodrama," could not be reunited by popular demand. This has been done, in particularly amusing, thrilling and gripping manner in "Evelyn Prentice," a Clarence Goodman mystery romance to be presented for the last times at the Regent tonight. Lunay Bain, Laurel-Oliver Hardy comedy, an interesting Pete Smith Specialty and a short musical will be exhibited on the same program. Rosalind Russell, William Powell and Myrna Loy in "Evelyn Prentice."

AT THE CAPITOL
"Shadows of Sing Sing"
A Story of Love Enmeshed in the Web of the Law!

"Shadows of Sing Sing" dealing with the strange case of a young Assistant District Attorney in love with the sister of a big-shot racketeer is the current attraction at the Capitol Theatre.

Mary Brian and Bruce Cabot, who enact the leading roles, head a strong cast that includes Grant Mitchell, Harry Woods, Bradley Page, Claire Du Brey, Irving Bacon, and Fred Kelsey.

The climax of "Shadows of Sing Sing" follows a series of dramatic situations which culminate in the murder of Mary Brian's notorious brother with a gun belonging to Cabot. The latter is the first to discover the body and is in the act of telephoning for the police when the detectives arrive and arrest him for first-degree murder.

Just how all these complications are worked out and the identity of the true murderer discovered develops into perhaps the most exciting underworld drama yet filmed in Hollywood. In producing the picture the Studios incorporated the complete set-up of the Identification Bureau of the Police Department of a large city revealing every detail of the complicated process employed in tracking down criminals sought in every part of the world.

Cabot's first film was "Roadhouse Murder" in 1931.

Mary Brian, like Cabot, reached film heights with her first role, "Wendy" in "Peter Pan."

"By Your Leave"

When the husband is away, it's just possible that the wife may play.

Particularly after he has gone on a marital holiday jaunt with the avowed intention of demonstrating how attractive he can be to other women.

Frank Morgan treats himself to such a holiday in the romantic comedy, "By Your Leave" and Genevieve Tobin, who portrays his wife, turns the tables on him. But while he is proving a dismal flop as a spy Leblanc, she is having an exciting flirtation with a handsome young engineer.

Neil Hamilton plays the explorer. Others in the cast include Marion Nixon, Glenn Anders, Margaret Hamilton, Gene Lockhart, Betty Grable and Charles Ray. Lloyd Corrigan directed the picture, which is based upon the Broadway stage hit of the same name. Frank Morgan plays the leading male role.

Tomorrow Only

"The Red Rider", thrilling Western serial, starring Buck Jones and his wonder horse, Silver.

CHINESE PIRATES SEIZE STEAMER

Loaded With Children Later Released But Two Guards Killed

Hong Kong, Feb. 1 (AP)—Two Russian guards aboard the S. S. Tungchow, carrying 75 British, American and Scandinavian school children, were killed by pirates according to a report today to the China Navigation Company agents in Shanghai. All the children were reported safe.

The British second engineer of the ship, which is of British registry, Sr. McDonald, was reported wounded. The casualties were presumed to have occurred during the battle for possession of the ship, later released.

The British Naval Intelligence in Shanghai was advised the vessel headed for Junk Bay, Hong Kong, after its release and was due to arrive late tonight.

The Shanghai agents for the China Navigation Company owners of the Tungchow, refused to divulge any information concerning the vessel's seizure but asserted all the passengers on board were unharmed.

British Vessels Search

Word of the steamer's safety came while British war vessels combed the China coastal waters in search of the craft, 96 hours overdue at Chefoo, its destination.

The children on board with five teachers were returning to the foreign mission school at Chefoo after a seven weeks' holiday.

They boarded the steamer at Shanghai Tuesday and were due at Chefoo yesterday. Concern for the vessel's safety arose when the Tungchow failed to make a scheduled call en route at Wehaiwei.

The British admiralty ordered three war vessels, the Sandwich, Suffolk and a destroyer to speed to the aid of the missing craft.

The disappearance of the Tungchow, one of the finest passenger craft sailing along the China coast, provided one of the most startling mysteries ever to have occurred in the pirate-infested waters. There have been numerous incidents of steamers and sailing craft being raided by pirates but for so large a number of children to have been exposed to such an experience is virtually unprecedented.

STRIKING MINERS EMERGE FROM PIT

Self Imposed Entombment Due to Protest Against Wages

Pecs, Hungary, Feb. 1.—(AP) — Driven by cold and hunger from their self-imposed entombment, 75 striking coal miners emerged today from the damp and dark pit into which they descended as a protest against their wage scale.

They were taken exhausted to their homes, while their 625 companions, who went into the flooded mine yesterday remained there, one-half mile below the frozen surface of the ground. They have threatened to commit suicide by starvation unless their demands for a 10 per cent increase in pay are recognized.

The strikers deliberately cut themselves off from the outside world when they placed heavy wooden beams across the pit to prevent operation of the elevators. It is impossible either to approach the prisoners or to send them food.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 1 (CP)—Trading was decidedly slow in the mining department with prices however, holding fairly firm aside from a few losses in the senior gold group. Base metals and silver stocks were steady and quiet.

Pickle Crow, Cody's Lake and Little Long Lac sold down in the first hour and a few others of the second group suffered a fair cent each as Dome and Hollinger weakened lightly. The tone for the golds was slightly firmer this afternoon but trading continued in very low volume.

A loss of 5 cents for Eldorado and the only change in the silver group of any consequence. Base metal shares were featureless.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 1 (CP)—A buying demand was in non-existent in the industrial section today as trading was confined to a few issues. Prices were steady in the gold classes with Hollinger Consolidated and Dome Mines each showing a fractional advance. Casual offerings fell on the bids that had been placed under the market, thus scaling down the price level by fractions.

Oil shares were inclined to hold their ground while the lighter metals were off. Vulcan and Nickel, C.P.R. and Ford A. slipped back lightly. The base metal group competitively heavy in C.P.R. and for a time the price was up but the gain was lost in the afternoon and a little extra. Brazilian held unchanged. Reconstallan held a point or more were shown in Bell Telephone, Consolidated Smelters and some of the preferred issues.

WALL ST. FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 1 (AP) — Straddling financial markets today showed little disposition to step out in any direction.

In the Canadian list, McIntyre Porcupine and National Nickel eased while Hamilton Bloves and Canadian Wallace showed a shade better. Dominion Government bonds ruled narrow. Canadian dollars held around 3-32 of a cent higher at 99.90¼ cents.

Among share gainers of fractions to around a point or more were Canadian Carbon, Air Reduction, Bethlehem Steel preferred, Inland Steel, Kennecott, Sulphur, Standard Brands, Brooklyn-Manhattan Transit, Wrigley and International Harvester. An advance of 2 points was registered by Hudson Motors. A few fractions, U.S. Smelting, Allied Chemical, Santa Fe, U.S. Steel preferred and Union Pacific lost about a point each.

A decline in car loadings for the week ended Jan. 26, of 31,000 cars to 661,000 was unusually bearish. The total of 555,768 was seen as about normal by one statistical service, while another estimated it as a little more than seasonal.

NEW YORK CLOSE

NEW YORK, Feb. 1.—(AP)—The Stock Market jogged along today with caution the keynote. Price changes variously mixed. Santa Fe lost more than a point and fractional losses were registered in U. S. Steel, Du Pont and Consolidated Gas. American Telephone, Johns-Manville and Westinghouse were slightly higher. Transfers approximated 500,000 shares.

HITLER INTERFERES, LETS POLA ENTER

Berlin, Feb. 1 (AP)—Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler personally came to the aid of Pola Negri, Polish motion picture star, today overruling the propaganda ministry's order prohibiting the actress from working in Germany on the grounds she was suspected of having Jewish blood. Hitler ruled Miss Negri could remain in Germany and act in a new German film in which she is to be starred. She was declared to be Polish.

BOARD ROOM GOSSIP

Royalite.

Financial Service is advised that during the past four months a considerable amount of stock has been taken off the market, which has gone into strong hands of supposedly well-informed people. Most of the stock has been bought under the 30-level has been so purchased on the basis of the comparatively high yield which the stock gives on last year's dividend payments and the strong belief that earnings in 1935 will justify larger dividends this year. In some quarters it is estimated that Royalite could pay at least $1.50 a share during 1935 on which basis the stock would give a yield of 7½ per cent at 20.

PREMIER

Premier gold's deal with B. C. silver will hardly show results in the way of earnings until the close of 1936. The deal does not become operative until Jan. 1936 so that for this year Premier will continue to clean up its own property which is estimated at approximately 12 cent yearly dividend. is safe as the company is paying the bulk of its dividend from a section of Capital from reserves. In the past seven years Premier had paid $1.30 per share of which 53 cents was from earnings and 86 cents from reserves. Reserves at the end of the last fiscal year stood at $13,292,488 or $2.66 per share outstanding.

Read Authier

There does not appear to be any particular reason for the pronounced weakness in Read Authier except the announcement a few weeks ago that the company had dropped their option on Kirkland Lake property. Financial Service, Rouh Lamaque and Dominion Explorer sell above the dollar. The stock is suffering from lack of sponsorship and general weakness in mining market.

Ymir Yankee

According to a wire from Sidney Norman, Mining Engineer of the Vancouver Sun, Yankee Girl mill at Ymir Nelson division which went into commercial production in May was up to 30 tons daily and by the end of the year hoped to be getting one hundred tons. Everything is reported to be working smoothly under the new crushing plant. Recent news from two Star Mines of Ymir Gold Mines, Ltd. feed from most easterly Yankee Girl workings reported drifting in strong vein development.

Canadian Industrial Alcohol.

Canadian Industrial Alcohol has sold a substantial quantity of American liquor to meet needs used to reduce bank loans, it was learned yesterday from official sources. It was also learned the company will take over complete control of the U. S. Distilleries Corporation Distillers Inc. Previously a 50 per cent interest was held by the subsidiary, the other 50 per cent being held by Canadian Industrial Alcohol Corporation. Locals interested in Canadian Industrial Alcohol were talking of a dividend in the near development yesterday.

It was pointed out that the move would result in widening of company's profit margin by 25 to 35 cents a gallon, it was stated.

Under the old agreement with National Distillers all of Canadian Industrial's profits were taken through the former—but now it is stated in addition to profits through the American subsidiary Canadian Industrial will be able to make sales through any other avenues which may open up. The stocks were strong yesterday, 71½ bid, raised ½ to 8¾ with sales of 2,830 shares.

GOLD CLAUSE

The Brookmire Counselor in its investment service to clients calls attention to the unsettlement produced by the gold clause decision largely subsided—while industrial expansion continues—during the period of protracted delay might exercise patience and deliberation in filling out purchases based on more definite indications of the completion of the current trend due to readjustment which has been under way for two weeks in the country's industries.

COURT PLASTER NOT TAPE USED

Mr. Labatt said it was, "I had talked with him during the years 1931, 1932 and 1933 since the depression but had improved since repeal. Since 1933 he told me that he was four years ago."

The defense chief recalled the kidnappers had told Labatt they had tried to "get him" for four years.

Court Plaster Used

The material that was applied to the latter man's eyes next took the attention of the defence counsel.

In earlier testimony Mr. Labatt referred to "tape" being used. Under cross-examination he referred to it as court plaster.

Mr. Bell read a passage from the preliminary hearing evidence in which Labatt referred to the coverings of dark glasses.

Labatt steadfastly affirmed his eyes had been covered with court plaster and he could, once more.

"When I looked in the tape I was referring to court plaster."

Defence counsel showed him two rolls of adhesive tape.

"Was it as wide as this adhesive?"

"It wasn't adhesive; it was court plaster."

"Oh it wasn't adhesive?"

"No sir," said Mr. LaPlariand didn't see the purpose of this line of questioning.

Tape Covered by Goggles

"I will seek to show," Bell said, "that you made mistakes in referring to the tape as court plaster and that he could see anything."

"Yes, that is a vital point," His Lordship agreed.

"In order that you might see at all you had to look through an opening in the goggles, not over the eyes?" counsel asked Labatt.

"I have told you that, looking straight ahead I could see through the windshield."

Labatt who put the goggles on you must have come close to them."

"Not necessarily."

"Did he put them on you or did he give you the goggles to put them on yourself?

Labatt declined "the taping" on his eyes was covered by a pair of goggles.

"At any rate," said Bell, "whoever gave you the goggles must have failed to put the tape."

Mr. Bell was seeking to show Labatt's option would have noticed if he could see through the "taping."

Prosecutor Faetious

An inaudible remark from Crown Prosecutor A. G. Cream, K.C., brought protest from Bell.

"I want that remark repeated," said the defence chief, turning to Judge McFarland.

"What was the remark?" asked His Lordship.

"I was being facetious," said the prosecutor.

"Then it all right, then, if it was not meant for the jury," Bell remarked.

The matter was dropped.

Bell sought the man applying the goggles would not have noticed the aperture in the "taping" if he had been looking.

Questioned further by Bell he said: "I was looking at the face before me. I said if he had one he would not have noticed the opening between the strips of plaster."

"How many times have you repeated this story?"

"What story?"

"The story you're telling now."

Repeated Story, he Said

Labatt said he told it at preliminary hearings at extradition proceedings and again today.

"You rehearsed it for police?"

"Oh yes, and the police."

Labatt said that when the kidnappers were driving him to the Muskoka hideout Lamarr Hunt-man said, "hand over all the money you've got."

The defence chief pointed out Labatt had not quoted Meisner as saying, "Give up your pennies," here.

"I told police I'm sure," he said.

Such a remark was not on record before yesterday's hearing, the defence chief said.

When Labatt was held in the Muskoka hideout he had been allowed to take off his eye bandages, he said, and moved to look his eyes, he said, but at a point of time that he did not look at the men who held him.

"But you say you had already seen their faces?"

"Yes."

"I might have had a better look. But I had seen him distinctly before."

Conversation in Car

Bell returned to the conversation Labatt said he had with Meisner in the car.

The brewer had been sitting behind the driver.

"Yes."

"And part of the right hand door."

"I could see it all."

"Then you could see anything that happened through that Pegram, the driver, would see if could see through the glasses, notwithstanding the yellow glasses."

He could also see the man sitting beside him.

He said a Mr. Ivy and his brother had accompanied him.

"No armed escort?"

"No."

Knew Countryside

Labatt said he had been driven mostly along gravel roads on the way to the Lake Muskoka hideout.

He could see clearly the road signs and knew the country well.

The general manager of the brewery had a cottage in Muskoka about two miles from the hideout cottage.

Defense counsel recalled testimony that the car had stopped for gasoline.

"The driver of the car got out and purchased the gasoline?" asked Bell.

"Yes."

"And the man who put the gas in the car came close to the machine."

"I didn't see him."

"But he must have put the gas in the car."

"Yes."

"Do you realize that if you had failed to tell police you had seen a foot further. Here you could have raised an alarm."

Had Been Warned

"I had been warned."

"You presumed you would be shot, is that the understanding?"

"I was not armed—probably the gas station man was not—and the two others were."

At two other stops for groceries and gas he could have raised an alarm, Bell said.

"There were men were rather familiar in addressing you?" the defence counsel suggested.

Labatt said "John" Used

"What do you mean?"

Bell recalled they had addressed their captive as "John" on two occasions.

"Did both men call you John?" asked defense counsel.

Tributes to Mr. Newman.

Tributes to Mr. Newman, late Secretary of the Ontario Chamber Association with the Belleville Chamber of Commerce has resulted in considerable interest in the city of Belleville and the district as a whole. The announcement of his death today came as a distinct shock to Mr. Fred Hartley, manager of the local Chamber.

In 1933 Mr. Newman represented the Belleville Chamber of Commerce at the Congress of Chambers of Commerce of the British Empire, held at London, and was successful in introducing an important resolution drafted by him and Mr. Hartley. A Past President of the Ontario Association of Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce, he was one of the well known members of that important institution.

"His loss to the whole district will be a material one and the news of his death has been a real shock to members of the Chamber. It is only due to him to pay tribute to the former Picton resident.

Noticeably affected by the death of Mr. Newman, Mr. W. E. Illsley, manager of the local branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce paid a fine tribute to the loyalty with which he had served the county of Prince Edward during his many years residence there and in which he had carried on a most successful business in the wholesale trade.

"Mr. Newman was a man whose native ability enabled him to become one of the leaders of this section. He was working constantly at all times for the good of his county and the district. We who County and Canada Mayor of the Town of Picton in 1916, he went out of office until 1919 when he was returned by friends the late Mr. Newman refused to be nominated for the Mayor during 1920-21-22-23-25-26. LEFT-HANDED MAN POSSIBLE WRITER

Edward J. Reilly, chief defence attorney, asked Trendley:

"As the result of your study and examination of the ransom notes and the Hauptmann request writings, are you in a position to render an opinion as to the guilt or not of Hauptmann, this defendant, wrote the ransom notes?"

"In my opinion," said Trendley, "he did not."

Personal Point in Case

The ransom notes represent a cardinal point in the prosecution's case against Hauptmann. The first note was left on the window sill of the Lindbergh nursery the night the baby was stolen, March 1, 1932. Police theorize the man who wrote the first note also climbed a ladder to the window of the nursery, stole the baby and dashed it to death as the ladder broke on the way down.

Eight experts qualified by the State gave their positive opinion Hauptmann wrote that note as well as the 13 others which were received by Col. Charles A. Lindbergh through divers means.

Ex-Did you examine the handwriting of other persons particularly Bruno Richard Hauptmann?

A.—Yes.

Reilly's question was the first implication of the day the defense would attempt to show Mrs. Anne Flash, manna's dead business partner, was the writer of the ransom notes.

Testimony on Photographs

Reilly by a series of questions on the photography of handwriting appeared to be laying the ground work for an attack on the trustees of the state's photos of the Hauptmann writing which has been introduced in connection with the ransom notes.

He asked a "we" in Hauptmann's writing.

Q.—You do not find a "we" like that on the ransom notes?

A.—No.

Critical of Chart

The defence was sharply critical of Osborn's chart, bringing out through Trendley Osborn had omitted many words from the first ransom note, the nursery note.

Trendley said there was a differ-

Rangers on Wave of Comeback Defeat Leafs for Second Time In Three Days by Score of 3-2

Now Within Four Points of Section Leaders, Chicago CANADIENS TIE

Hold Red Wings to 4-4 Draw; While Maroons Take Amerks

By A. E. FULFORD

(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Rushing along on the crest of the most convincing comeback wave the National Hockey League has seen in years, Lester Patrick's New York Rangers were more satisfied than ever today that nothing can head them from the Stanley Cup playoffs.

With a little argument, in fact, the old silver fox and his henchmen might even find themselves and a lot of others lolo believing they stand a good chance of flinging in the strap for the N.H.L. title, waged between the first finishers in the two divisions.

Bringing their comeback record to eight wins and three ties in 11 games, Rangers last night registered a 3-2 win over Toronto Leafs, the team they probably would meet if they finished on top in the American section.

That gave them a season record with the Leafs of three wins and one lost a much better one than any other team can boast. But what was more significant the two points they collected lifted them to within four points of Chicago, the section leaders.

Can Win Section Honors

If they can win their contest on Sunday night with Detroit whom they displaced in third position, and other contests the week-end card next week to their liking, the team that was generally counted out a month ago may be right in the thick of the fight Chicago and Boston are staging for the section leadership.

The best Red Wings could do in Detroit last night was a 4-4 tie with Leo Dandurand's Montreal Canadiens. Solidify in second place ten points up on Habitants but still 11 behind Toronto, Montreal Maroons knocked off Americans 3-0 in New York. It was Joe Simpson's second defeat since he shook up the team earlier in the week.

Perhaps it was because Toronto failed to hand out the bodychecks they usually find so effective against Rangers that the Patrickmen looked so good last night. More likely it was a combination of improved hockey by the Rangers and Leafs' lack of Harvey Jackson and Harold Cotton, both out with injuries.

At any rate, the New Yorkers found three goals in the second period after Toronto had opened the counting in the first frame and successfully stood off Toronto attempts to get more than one goal in the last two.

Dillon Scores Two

Cecil Dillon, the Thornbury, Ontario, boy, learned most of his hockey at Meadow Lake of the New Yorkers' goals and Bert Connolly, former Hamilton Hawk, the other. Andy Blair and Buzz Boll scored the Leafs' goals in their second loss to Patrick's team in three days.

Wings and Canadiens staged a thrill-packed battle at Detroit, the home team coming from behind to overcome a two-goal lead when Larochelle and the Mantha Brothers, Georges and Sylvio, gave the Habitants in the first.

Herb Lewis and Hec Roche rapped goals for their former teammate Wilf Cude in that period and after scoring twice more the Detroit team went ahead on markers by Ned Pudvan, recently brought up from Detroit Olympics and Ebbie Goodfellow. Wings were trying the same with a gang attack when Leroy Goldsworthy broke away and beat Dave Kerr with a long goal half-way through the third.

The defensive defence of Alex Smith and Bill Brydge let Russ Blinco and Paul Haynes clear in the second and third periods for the Maroon goals in New York. The shutout ended the sixth Alex Connell, Maroon goalie, has set up for his remarkable comeback after a season away from the game.

Connell and Lorne Chabot, New York shots to join Tiny Thompson Boston; Lorne Chabot, Chicago; and George Hainsworth, Toronto, in the select class who have played half a dozen perfect games.

N. H. L. STARS

(By the Canadian Press)

The leading boys, George and Sylvio Mantha, Canadiens scored two of Habitants' goals in their 4-4 tie with Detroit.

CARNERA WANTS TO FIGHT BAER

Primo Thinks He Can Whip Title Holder Any Place

Miami, Fla., Feb. 1 (CP)—Primo Carnera cast great shadows on the silvery sands of this winter resort today, beach clothes on his mountainous frame and Max Baer on his mind.

Carnera arrived here yesterday from South America and when some one mentioned Baer's name the Sibiling Italian exploded in "Ba-a-a-h-h" that blew down a dozen palm trees, according to uncontested reports.

"I fight Baer anytime, any place, in the backyard or in the ring—and I beat him to pieces," fumed Primo, and he acted contemptuously, the man who took the world heavyweight crown from him in New York last June obviously still weighing his mind.

Bill De Voe, one of the former champion's managers, chuckled into his beard as he listened to Carnera tell how he intended to regain his title, then continued:

"That's all he has' talked and thought about since he left North America two months ago."

What, if any, progress has been made toward re-matching the mountain that is a man with the dancing Baer, De Voe was not willing to say.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

To participate in their third consecutive game of the week the Belleville "Combines" move into Cobourg this evening. Manager Thomas signed "Rosie" Rosenplot of the Trenton Imperials last night and was still angling for a left winger when he left the Arena after practice. The manager would give an eye, a leg, and perhaps a couple of farms for a good left winger for his second line. With the acquisition of Derby Jeffery and the improved defence, the team is looking better every time out. With Doug Powers teaming perfectly with Covert and Carl Morgan, the team carries a scoring threat. Jimmie McGuire and Rosenplot should be two good aspirants for the second line, they need one more good left-handed rifler. Perched safely in second place they can better their position by taking a fall out of the Wednesday game here next Wednesday which means that the Petes and the "Combines" will clash in Belleville Monday and get the final game of the schedule here on Wednesday. The manager tried to have the dates switched in order to have the home game first, but the Petes would have no part of it. "I guess I'll have to accept their terms if I'm going to have a return home game here Tuesday" said Mr. Thomas after a long distance telephone talk last night.

Apparently the record accomplishments of the Belleville "Y" basketball team have travelled afar. Yesterday Coach Ralph Morden received communication from the Camp Borden "Flyers" in reference playing an exhibition game here in the near future. The letter was dispatched by Flying Officer Tommy Byrne, ex-Belleville athlete now receiving his aerial education at Camp Borden, particulars of which a game be staged. Coach Morden is seriously considering bringing the "Flyers" to Belleville on the date which should prove a boom to the gasping basketball "Y" treasury. Forward for the Belleville "Y" squad is an ex-Camp Borden trooper which naturally would make the game more interesting. The Belleville basketball team are the first intermediates are in Kingston this evening for a twin bill of O.R.B.A. basketball when the fast Queen's teams. The local juniors should contend with Kingston Frontenac today towards the group title, while the Belleville Senior Basketball League senior opposition facing them. A win for the intermediate squad, however will hoist the Morden-coached crew back into sole possession of first place in the loop. Both local squads have been practicing of late at the Armouries, where they are afforded a large spacious floor similar to that at Queen's University. If the weather happens to moderate in the near future, the local cagers may try staging a basketball game in the Armouries for the benefit of fans who have never witnessed this thrilling game. Recently a crowd of 18,000 fans jammed their way into Madison Square Gardens to witness an intercollegiate game, so popular has basketball become in the U.S.A.

Affer spending the night in the Belleville General Hospital "Stevie" McGrath was removed to his home on Catherine Street, late yesterday afternoon. "Stevie" had five stitches placed in his forehead following his head-on crash with "Mickey" McGuire, who in turn was patched up with two clamps. The accident, which happened during Wednesday night's junior fray, was purely accidental, but most unfortunate. McGrath will be confined to his home for the remainder of the week at least. At present the time of writing the Belleville juniors are through with their schedule, having won three and lost three games during the season and assured themselves of a play-off with the Petes. The battle is now on for fourth position in the group. Tweed and Napanee battle out for that honor in the first three games in the group meet in a play-off, the third place team meeting the second and the winner clashing with the first team for the championship in a two-game sequence.

Although about 700 patrons passed through the turnstiles at the Belleville arena to witness the Boy Scouts' carnival, the marked absence of skaters in costume militated the night's entertainment. The outstanding feature of the night's performance was the presentation of fancy and figure skating by the members of the Quinte Skating Club. Introduced two years ago to Belleville skaters, fancy skating is fast becoming a highlight in local recreation. The Misses Olivia Davies, Betty and brother Gordon and 12 year old Elmer Pinnegan of Frankford, were well executed in the art of fancy and figure skating. Jack Murphy was the fans favorite and he put on a thrill with his barrel jumping act, while Bill Holway's tramp act would have been more successful had he not given so much of his usual refreshments to the spectators. 'Twas a gala night for all.

Kaleidoscope of Color Seen as Scout Troops Stage Annual Carnival

BAND ATTENDS

'Pig Skin Peters' Birdseye Centre, Puts on Clever Pantomime

A kaleidoscope of color turned the Belleville Arena into a fairyland last evening, when the Belleville Boy Scouts troops sponsored their second annual carnival. The fine attendance being cut down considerably by the extreme cold weather, which prevailed. Fancy and figure skating presented by members of the Quinte Skating Club, barrel jumping, trick and clown skating were introduced before the audience, the latter, were allowed to parade before the judges. The feature of the evening was the appearance in town of a clever Canadian comedy skating character, "Pig Skin Peters of Birdseye Centre", whose comedy pantomime of how he tends goal for the Birdseye hockey team, literally rocked the ice palace with mirth, as the crowd roared with delight.

The gala night's programme opened at 8.30 p.m. the Belleville Municipal Band playing "O Canada", as a cordon of Boy Scouts stood at attention in full regalia. Then the "Pig Skin Peters" then officially opened the carnival and the night's fun and frivolity started with an exhibition of mixed skaters gracefully gliding over the glass-like ice surface in a waltz, that was highly appreciated. This act was followed by a waltz by Wilbur Christie as the club swung into a fast ten step that demonstrated their increased ice-skating ability.

Miss Davies in Solo Number

One of the features presented by the Quinte Skating Club was a solo appearance of Miss Olivia Davies of this city. Miss Davies performed a graceful fling in the air, most artistic manner to present a solo of fancy and figure skating. Her efforts were highly appreciated as were the efforts of Elmer Pinnegan, of Frankford, a 12-year-old member of the club, who held the spectators in close attention by his feature in another solo appearance of figure skating. Miss Betty Davies gave a solo appearance of fancy skating, while two junior members, Gordon Davies and Jean Parker, demonstrated the waltz, later assisted by Miss Wendy Ross.

Bill Holway, dressed as a tramp and making a pretty picture of himself as he crashed to the ice, wore an old pair of skates and added much entertainment to the evening with his clowning act. Jack Murphy gave a splendid exhibition of barrel jumping, when he climaxed his performance, by clearing six barrels placed end to end in pyramid style. Previous to this Murphy favored ten boys, two abreast each other and also successfully jumping over six barrels placed end to end. Murphy's act was one of the highlights of the carnival.

Following the latter, then assumed the spotlight and successfully gave an entertaining exhibition of demonstration of how he saves the honor of Birdseye Centre as the hockey goalie. Peters was forced to shed no less than three heavy sweaters, before he could perform properly. Introduced by the "Pig Skin Peters" announcer as "Chuck" Gardner. A burlesque hockey game followed, Peters padded as fancy dressed comic defensemen, Mexican, coons, tramps, spritely dressed young ladies and gentlemen gracefully glided around the ice surface to the fans a most entertaining.

Best dressed girl—1, Ralph Graham; 2, Georgia Scott.

Ling, and Gordon Davies, Other club members participated in the ten step. Stan W. Wilbur acted as master of ceremonies for the evening.

'Dizzy' Visits Big City to Witness Game

New York, Feb. 1 (AP)—On the strength of 24 hectic hours, the heir apparent to the throne of baseball's most ignored figure, George Herman Ruth, is none other than Jerome Herman Dean.

Dizzy is here for the New York Baseball Writers' dinner Sunday night and he's been a sensation everywhere he's gone so far. Everyone speaks to him by his first name, baby and he speaks right back. He's shaken a couple of thousand big mitts since he arrived in the handsome Don George agreed "kay back. The match will be staged in June on one of the baseball parks here, under the charitable auspices of the Milk Fund.

Over the last two years these leading claimants of the world crown have collided twice, but on both occasions the matches were fiascos. Carnera and Uzcudun fought to draws. As this one is scheduled to go to a fall, it should appear an undisputed king will flex his muscles over the grapple group after June.

"Who was that with you?" he was asked.

"Oh," said Dizzy, "some fighter," He rested his elbows on the edge of his box, while his manager Frankie Frisch, explained what was going on.

His eyes popped as the skaters whirled roughly up and down the ice, bumping each other, each other down.

"Joe Medwick would love this," he said.

"Say, I sure wish I could get down to first base half as fast as those guys," he said.

"So do I, wish you could," said Frisch, who is no hero-worshipper.

'JEEM' LONDOS TO MEET GEORGE

New York, Feb.' 1 (CP)—Ed Don George is recognized as heavyweight wrestling champion in Canada and the New England States. "Jeem" Londos is looked upon as holder of that title in New York, Pennsylvania and westward.

Hence the matching of these monarchs for a finished match, announced here by impresario John Curley, had the wrestling realm somewhat agog today.

Over the last two years these leading claimants of the world crown have collided twice, but on both occasions the matches were fiascos. Carnera and Uzcudun fought to draws. Champion Junior Team of 1920 Had Worters, Conacher, McCurry

bur Miller, wing, one of Kitchener-Waterloo's last year as the all-time great. Others contend that the Newmarket Reds of five years ago were the best team ever to play the game. Others contend that the Stratford Midgets of 1928 were the greatest junior team of all time. At least four of the T.C.C. start schools have made a big name for themselves under the big top—several of them are still playing for each in the N.H.L. They swept through group opposition without a hitch and then on to the Canadian junior title by such one-sided scores that the play-offs weren't contested at all in the usual sense.

The Toronto Canoeists of that year trounced the Stratford Midgets in the O.H.A. junior championship finals by the aggregate score of 18 to 8. One game was played with Loyola, representing Quebec, and the result was 5-2 for the Paddlers. They took on the Selkirk team from Niagara Falls; Ab Conick, centre, now with Hamilton; Gus Lesp, wing, Port Arthur; Morris, centre, New Liskeard; Campbell Bidewood, trainer; Roy Swanson, defence, Hamilton, Ont.

Manitoba whom they eliminated by the scores of 10 to 1 and 5 to 4, and finally, they won the National title by downing through the Port Williams Beavers by the one-sided count of 13 to 1. It was a beaut.

...Became Pro Star

The personnel of the T.C.C. included Art Stuart, left wing, Lesl, Conacher stood in front of him; Billy Boyd, centre; Gerry McCurry was at right wing and Tex White at left wing, while other positions were well occupied by the two Hogarths and Applegath. Worters, Conacher's goal for the New York Americans and Conacher continues to break up attacks against the Montreal Canadiens. Burch and McCurry were prominent in the junior ranks and Tex and McCurry is still active as a referee.

It is true that four of last year's T.C.C. team succumbed to the professional ranks in Metz, Kelly, Archambault and Agnew signed with the Leafs in a body, and Reg Hamilton who went to Syracuse, but they have yet to be equaled in the style that characterized Worters, Conacher, Stuart and McCurry, while they made the jump. Only one of the 1932 Sudbury team has gained pro and professional this being Adelard Lafrance who was taken by the Montreal Maroons and is now playing for Quebec Beavers.

The present edition of the Sudbury Cub Wolves are being groomed for a killing in the 1935 play-downs and they will be disappointed if they don't make the grade The northern all-stars have been gathered from near and far and the nucleus which they marched off with the S.P.A. silverware indicates their merit. But the oncoming Kitchener Juniors did not compete in the S.P.A. series and with their new string of O. H. A. group wins the Greenshirts may prove a dark horse.

FORMER HOCKEY GREATS MAKING SENSATIONAL COMEBACKS

by Ann Forester

"Judith, you can't do this! You can't do this to my boy! You can't!" she was shaking like an aspen leaf, a terrible, frantic little figure, "Nick isn't the sort of man to hide under a cloak. He'll never stick . . . and he'll try and make the world accept you as his own terms. And it can't be done! Oh, believe me, my dear, it can't be done! I know the world! You'll break him! You'll break him! A proud man breaks inside of himself, and you'll call out your own heart in vain. You'll never get it back. You'll never get it back! Judith, I'm on my knees to you! Don't do this to Nick! Don't do it! I beg . . . I implore you! Don't break him! Don't break him! You can't hurt him and have him! Judith, oh, dear, dear, dear . . . Judith!"

"You'll break him! A proud man breaks inside of himself, and you'll call out your own heart in vain. You'll never get it back. You'll never get it back! Judith, I'm on my knees to you! Don't do this to Nick! Don't do it! I beg . . . I implore you! Don't break him! Don't break him! You can't hurt him and have him! Judith, oh, dear, dear, dear . . . Judith!"

"Grammy . . ."

"Oh, I can't let him go away alone . . ."

"I'm not, Grammy . . ."

"Yes, you can, Judith. And you will. You have no right to do this to Nick. I won't let you . . ."

"Grammy . . ." Judy's voice was shouted: "Grammy . . . you'll be excited in a minute. Please . . . please . . . Judy's all right. Grammy . . . Judy, oh, dear, darling . . ."

"Grammy . . ."

"It isn't the end, Judy. We'll drive through it . . ."

The clamor of a gong, driving the blood from their faces . . . "Hurry . . . hurry, girl! Nick—the gig—hurry, girls! Come—quickly. Tell them to . . ."

A nightmare of crowding faces . . . Nick . . . almost carrying the body of Grammy through the confusion . . . Pale as the tan-besmirched eyes . . . Judy's stunned silence, with the world looking on.

"Grammy—poor little Kitsa . . . Darling . . . Goodbye . . ."

Standing down there on the dock looking up at the high deck of the steamer . . . Then at the end of the gangplank—Nick's face, drawn through her tears.

Movement through the great steamer . . . a glass of bottle green water—widening between the white sides of the ship and the wharf. Sodden paper streamers orange and dancing on its surface. The sun-stricken, washing the white and gold steamer in a thin gold . . . The head—playing "Until we meet again. . . ."

Judy slipped her arm around the thin frame of Madame—Nick's face up there—dear, brown face—suffering—trying to smile . . . Blurring through her tears. She flung them impatiently away with her free hands. The boat was out in the channel now—pointing its nose majestically toward the Golden Gate.

Judy could no longer be sure she saw Nick now. His face had blurred with other faces up there by the rail.

A snatch of music blown on the wind . . .

"So wait and pray each day—for me . . ."

Until we meet again . . ."

Nick was sailing for China—Alone.

DISASTROUS DAYS

CHAPTER SIXTY-FIVE

Madame Carter had accomplished the impossible. She had succeeded in getting Judy out of Hardwick when she followed Judy up to the city. The old lady's fierce family pride, her vigilant love for Judy would not admit even Martha the thankful into the dark secret. It was different. The Oriental was outside of the Carter world. Moreover, on Fox pivoted the whole discovery and there was no help for it.

Alone, the old lady had left the house in Keeps, the chauffeur, who had driven Miss Carter, for the old autocrat was not defeated, through the choking fog, for the year-old jigs had carried her down to the end of the line. She had known no one was ever to know, the terror and tremendous effort of that walk. Only Judy had Madame seen one alone like this lashed on by the terrible need of haste—the frail body the one thread which could hold the fabric of fate together.

No one knew how terrifically her heart pounded . . . driven against shaking its old casing to pieces. No one knew, because that proud old head would not lower, because the flame of the pioneer spirit still burned high in Madame's breast.

And later—after the wrench of seeing her beloved Nick sailing out of her life forever—Madame still sat stanchly upright in the bus, nodding her head to Lockwood and the rigid mold of life she had left behind her.

She could even pat Judy's hand with her own shriveled one. She could even deign to comfort the girl—she, who had just watched what we dearer than life, fade away, knowing she would never see it return.

But it was the last flare up of the flame. The guttering of the candle. Back home, Madame silenced Martha's reproaches with one imperious look, announced that she had insisted on Judy taking her to the city to see Nick bare, and—knowing she had carefully cleaned up behind her—got into bed and proceeded to take out of life.

Bitterly self-reproachful, Judy waylaid the doctor as he came down the stairs several mornings later after being called for Madame.

The physician looked indulgently at this pretty girl so genuinely grieving for his old friend and client.

"Stabbing I—nor anyone else, can do, Mrs. Carter. Madame has already past the allotted threescore and ten, granted us poor mortals, you know. Vitality getting low. The engine is simply worn out—that's all. Pity . . . Marvelous woman . . . Known her all my life. . . . Too bad. . . ."

"Her grandson—Nick—" Judy's voice choked on the words, "is on his way to China. Shouldn't he be told . . . I'm—called . . ."

The doctor shrugged and spread his hands. "Why? It may go on like this for months . . . possibly a year . . . longer. It may be tomorrow—today . . . Remarkable stamina . . . marvelous woman. . . ." He went away shaking his head in helpless admiration.

It added to the dreariness of Judy's life. Added to the ache in her heart for Nick.

Judy remembered this period in her life as the gloomy winter. Nick seemed to have carried the glory of autumn away with him into the Orient. It was an unusually wet winter, and perhaps she was more sensitive of this because of the grey dreariness in her own heart. Long days of tramping in the hills with Ride-slip, not caring whether the rain drove in her face and made red her coat or not. Grey afternoons, reading to Madame Carter in the third floor kingdom, while rain drummed on the roof and the little yellow shrivelled face against the pillow seemed more like a bit of carved ivory than ever. Madame seldom left her bed now, and innumerable hot water bottles were required to keep heat in the frail body.

Judy had urged her to go to the warmer climate of Santa Barbara—Santa Barbara where Madame had spent her honeymoon more than half a century before. But the old lady was adamant. It was as though she feared Death might call in her absence and find her not at home. Not even the girl's promise to go with her could move Madame—here she was and here she meant to stay.

Long nights when Judy lay awake listening to the rain drop in dreary little plops off the long pointed leaves of the eucalyptus trees outside her bedroom window.

Letters came from Nick. He had arrived . . . he was busy in the new organization . . . he spoke of the quaint streets—the color of the city . . . the gorgeousness of the sunsets. The bright color of the Orient crowded back the greyness of life when his letters arrived. Nick—as always—bringing a sense of freedom and far places. He wrote little of what lay nearest his heart. It was not like Nick to put his secret thoughts on paper. They were there between the lines. Read constancy into his: "Always, yours." Read heart-hunger for her in his simple "I miss you so".

A dreary time . . . It seemed to the girl that she had found that dreadful garden of Proserpine of which Swinburne wrote.

Here comes the lover that withers—
The soul's love, with wasting wings
And all dead dreams come hither
And all unfruitful things . . .

Dead dreams and disaster . . . it seemed to be making her life she thought bitterly.

But Judy Alone, in the big Carter house, seemed to be finding the living grey. Amy was keeping the rest of the fam ily in a turmoil with her constant chatter. The wedding had been postponed for a couple of inconsequential reasons—Judy suspected that the visit of Amy's old flame, Richard Curtis, had to do with one of them. It was definitely decided that on the 20th of December, Queens had been married with less excitement.

Silas was to be the best man. Amy had chosen Eunice for her matron of honor. Not only was this a charming gesture of their long friendship, but it pleased Amy to have Eunice playing second fiddle for once. To this end she had carefully selected the bridesmaids' frocks, and, since Eunice did not like green, Eunice should have chosen that color.

Eunice, who had been married many times by Patty Warren that lavender made her eyes appear fuming, had, after much planning, grey tones in her skin, was quite willing to be the canary-colored and furious, but helpless. This effect was to be Amy-cozy with.

Patty Warren, Marion Fewland, Marian Taber, Tony Wentworth, formed her other attendants. Georgia De Haas was definitely out of the picture—for now. The quarrel between Amy and herself had never been patched up and Patty Temple Dodge had unofficially dropped her. Georgia was sunk in her own narrow existence, overlooking herself with futile rage like some savage caged animal. Her horizon bounded by the barren court of the Bungalow Court Apartments and her contempt by the venomous schemes for revenge—schemes which came to nothing. Sallies from the impervious Amy and Eunice like so many blunted arrows.

The ceremony took place in the most fashionable church of Lockwood. Outside, a thin drizzling rain turned the streets to wet black satin; pedestrians went warily under shining umbrellas and, machines turned cautious corners with queer sudden mass of tires on the asphalt. But the church was a bower of soft color, the effect a mass of white and gold chrysanthemums and gleaming candles.

Seated in the pew beside Vera and Mrs. Carter, who appeared to think it her motherly duty to nod genially the whole time and dab delicately at her eyes with her real lace handkerchief, Judy looked out over the crowded church. A wedding . . . a flash and smokey . . . she thought of her own wedding, a girl stately, proud, with a light-struck paper bell; dreams in her eyes and hope in her heart . . . And that had been a flash and smokey, too. She and Stan . . . held together through hate

Stan's tall dark good looks made Billy Sumner appear commonplace. On the golf links, his natural element, Billy's sunburned hair, his red face, seemed at best boorish and wholesome. Here in this smother of flowers and candlelight, they made him appear par-boiled. Stan seemed not to notice with the attendant of an eager bridegroom as the tempo of a frightened and mildly demented lemade.

Now Amy was coming up the aisle to the dirling strains of the wedding march, leaning on the arm of an ante-diluvian cousin of Mrs. Carter's who, being the only available male, had been imported for the occasion. Amy, summoned, massaged and marcelled by Hilda's capable hands, looked the perfect stage image of gold and white, as shining, as empty as glass.

Quivering hush of the organ . . . murmured words . . . an expensive rustle as Amy's sailors kneeled to receive the clergyman's blessing. It was over. The ceremony, which included the Sumner fortune into Amy's tender care. The opening gun of the social rivalry between Amy Sumner and Eunice Wilson which was to convulse and entertain all of Lockwood for years to come.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was around at my sister Gladdia's this afternoon and after supper ma said to pop, Willyum, I'm afraid that young son of yours needs a little vigorous tawking to sometime this week and then wends. Gladdie called me up to inform me that he induced little Willie to swallow a heaping teaspoonful of fresh horseradish, she said.

G wundering ma jimminy Crissmas, pop, he asked me to leave him eat it, he begged me to. I said and pop said: Well if Willie was silly enough to clammer for it, perhaps he better had let him profit by the experience and let the matter drop.

Why should the child clammer for horseradish of all things out of a blue sky? ma said, and pop said, Children are peculiar people. Also reminds me that Benny is still far from being an adult and perhaps will bare a little more questioning. Just how did the subject of horseradish first enter the picture, if I am not being too personal? he said.

Well, there was a thing full of it on the dining room table, and I used to tell Willie all about what made the Indians see so good; they used to bear a twig every half a mile, away, I said, and pop said, and just what did give them their uncanny vision.

Eating a spoonful of horseradish every day, I said, and pop said: And just where did you hear that information?

Nowheres, but I never heard they didn't, I said, and pop said, Did you ever hear that the rapid agitation of 2 successive raps with an ordinary bedroom slipper on a boy's posterior would sound like the Chimes of Normandy?

Why no, I said, and pop said: Neither did I, but I'm going to try it.

Wich he did, and it didn't.

Tarzan of the Apes had witnessed the entire encounter from the moment the lion had leaped upon Nu ma ya'ya. For one time before, he had been watching the girl. When Numa attacked her, the ape-man had at first been minded to—let the lion have his way with her. What was she but a hated Red Spot? Had he not seen her in enemy headquarters conferring with the high command? And later, masquerading as a British officer? It was the latter thought—that prompted him to interfere. British would be glad to question her. Like all only recognized her but also the lion. Jungle creatures the ape-man had that miraculous sense of scent—

Doubtless the lion would be glad to question her. Tarzan not —by which he could recognize individual animals. He knew this lion had reason to remember him. Those unintelligible sounds Oga had heard caused Numa to draw back, undecided whether to charge or flee as Tarzan came toward him.

SAYS HAUPTMANN NOT MAN IN CAR SEEN WITH LADDER

Mysterious Blue Car Held Ladder, Declares Harding

CRIME IS ADMITTED

Young Laborer Surprise Witness at Kidnap Trial

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 1.—The story of a mysterious dark blue car that carried two men and a ladder toward the scene of Baby Lindbergh's abduction and the hotly disputed testimony of a handwriting witness were linked yesterday with Bruno Richard Hauptmann's alibi defence.

Just before the celebrated murder trial reached the end of its 22nd Crematic day, the carpenter's counsel won the right to put the first hand-writing expert on the witness stand to attack the state's identification of Hauptmann as the ransom-writer. The half-hour process duties fought to keep the expert from the stand.

The new twist witnesses, a Hunterdon baker artist and a Harlem restaurant owner, bolstered the accused man's story of what he did on the night the golden-haired baby was stolen and slain.

Hauptmann's tale of that wild first night of March 1, 1932, was that: That he was in the Bronx, 60 miles from the lonely hopewell home of Col. and Mrs. Charles A. Lindbergh, that he called for his wife at the bakery where she worked; took the baker's dog for a walk and then went home with Mrs. Hauptmann.

Much of the prosecution's fire was directed at the credibility and record of Lou Harding, young laborer, in a tattered lumber-jacket, who swore that two men in a station wagon, loaded with a ladder, asked him directions to the Lindbergh estate on the afternoon of the kidnapping.

Neither of the men was Hauptmann and the ladder appeared to be "one of them slide ladders" like the one used in the kidnapping.

With Harding and the alibi witnesses out of the way, the defence called John M. Trendley of East St. Louis, to contradict eight several state witnesses who swore that Hauptmann wrote every one of the 14 ransom notes and thus perpetrated a grisly $50,000 hoax.

Testifies Today

Despite the lengthy fight the prosecution waged on Trendley's qualifications, he was qualified by Supreme Court Justice Thomas W. Trenchard. Today he will make his comparisons of the ransom notes and the Hauptmann handwriting.

Louis Rise, the balk artist, a thin, wiry chip of a man, testified he was in Fredericksen's bakery, the Bronx, on the night of March 1, 1932, and saw Hauptmann enter with a police dog. He remembered the date because he said, because he took his son to Bellevue Hospital "exactly one week before the Lindbergh kidnapping."

The state, however, will produce hospital records to prove the boy was taken to the hospital on Feb. 22, almost a week to a week before the baby was abducted and slain.

August van Henke, dark and unmoved by the cross-examination of Attorney-General David T. Wilentz, swore he met Hauptmann in a Bronx street near the Fredericksen bakery on the night of March 1 and thought the German carpenter had a police dog on a leash but he was not.

Van Henke's testimony was attacked by Wilentz, who elicited the fact that the restaurant Van Henke operated was raided at least twice as a speakeasy, that van Henke used three different names and that a race track "bookie" had sometimes used the restaurant as a headquarters.

The witness testified he first heard of the kidnapping the night it happened "around 10, 11 o'clock" when he went into the street after dinner and heard people talking of the crime. A check in New York showed today the news was broadcast over the radio at 11 p.m. on March 1, and the first newspaper containing the news came from the presses between 10.45 and 11 p.m.

Admits Crime Record

Harding was next. There was no noticeable doubt in the Trenton laborer's voice as he swore to the men, the car, and the ladder, which he told Edward J. Reilly, chief of defence counsel, looked "something like" the kidnap ladder.

Wilentz pounced on him with vigor, drew from Harding that he had a criminal record, had served one in a reformatory and twice in a workhouse and made him admit he couldn't describe the ladder he saw "exactly."

Hauptmann listened with interest as witnesses told their stories in his behalf, then defended him. Again in his front row seat, Colcharles A. Lindbergh followed the testimony intently, as he had throughout the trial. Now and then he conferred with associates, who took numerous notes and sent out messages to police in an effort to check the stories and background of the witnesses.

Harding, a surprise witness, said "we was putting down a sidewalk" along Washington Road, Princeton, between 2 and 2.30 o'clock on the afternoon of March 1, 1932, when "a kind of dark blue suburban car" with two men in it drew up and asked directions to the Lindbergh estate.

He talked to them about five minutes, he told Reilly.

Q.—Was either of the two men this defendant? A.—I could not tell.

Q.—Now, did you look in the car? A.—Yes, sir, I certainly did.

Q.—What did you see in the car?

A.—There was a ladder in the car.

Q.—And a pasteboard box. What kind of a pasteboard box? A.—Well, it was a heavy pasteboard box about three foot long, I guess, I imagined that was the kind of a big box.

Q.—Suburban car," he said, had three or four seats in it, "and them seats was out."

Q.—If two seats in there at all, but the ladder was down in the bottom of this car and the box was on top of it, the witness added.

Q.—And were the two men sitting in the front seat of the car? A.—In the front seat of the car.

Q.—And it was daylight. A.—Daylight.

Q.—And you had a good look at them? A.—I certainly did.

Harding said the next day he was taken by police to the Lindbergh estate and "I shook hands" with Col. Lindbergh.

Saw Ladder Again

Q.—And did you see the same ladder that you had seen in that car anywhere around that estate? A.—Why, yes, sir, the same ladder.

Q.—Where was it. A.—The ladder was right up to the window. As I went into the side door, the ladder then was up on the outside by the window.

The kidnap ladder was shown to the witness and he said the one in the car "was something kind of like that." He added he could not see all of the ladder as it lay in the machine.

Q.—Your best recollection is that it was a ladder of this description? A.—Yes, seven, eight feet about that.

The state then produced in court Arthur Larsen, who worked with Elvert Carpenter at the Dunfellen house, and asked the witness if it was not true both he and Larsen had spent the kidnap night in the house where they were employed. Carpenter denied it, and said he would not believe the house owner's penciled records if they showed that. He admitted, however, that Larsen slept in the house through out the week and returned to his Bronx home only for the week-ends.

Larsen, it was indicated, would be called by the prosecution to testify that Carpenter never left Dunellen the night of the Lindbergh crime.

LOVE AFFAIR IS TOLD BY WITNESS

Miss Brandon Tells of Romance With Major Shepard

TOPSHELA, Kan. Feb. 1.—(AP)—The story of a shattered triangle romance, haltingly told by the tall, attractive Grace Brandon, was added to the testimony today in the government's second attempt to convict Major Charles A. Shepard of wife murder.

The 28-year-old army stenographer, for whose love Federal prosecutors contend the 43-year-old Canadian-born army surgeon allegedly poisoned his second wife, was expected to complete her story of the May and December romance today.

Sometimes in tears, other times hesitant, she related in a low voice the officer's expressions of love before the mysterious death of Mrs. Shepard at Fort Riley, Kas., in June 1929, and of his suggestions they marry two weeks later.

"He kept telling me he had never loved any other woman like he loved me and —well, you know,—things like that," she said haltingly.

Spectators in the federal courtroom laughed and tittered.

Girl Tells Story

The slender, nervous-faced defendant, who once before had heard the Brookfield, Tex., stenographer tell the story of their romance, sat motionless. At the previous trial he was convicted and sentenced to serve a life term. He is a native of Belleville, Ont.

Heralding an attack on the testimony of the government's age witness, C. L. Eagey, Chief Defense Attorney, was jubilant when the session ended.

"We think we can show many discrepancies between this and her previous testimony," he announced.

Miss Brandon said their first date was dinner at a Chinese restaurant. Later in company with another couple they drove to Nuevo Laredo, Mexico.

While at a bar, Miss Brandon said the officer caught her hand and said "would you marry me if I divorced my wife?"

"I said, 'Yes'."

"He clicked our glasses together and he said 'Then the nibbles are our truth'."

She testified she had burned two suitcases "crammed as full as you could cram them" of letters she had received before Mrs. Shepard's death, but had saved the rest. They are government exhibits.

MAY CHALLENGE IN 1936

LONDON, Feb. 1.—(AP)—G. R. Fairey, British sportsman, already has started preliminary plans for America's Cup yachting campaign in 1936—but whether he really will challenge, depends on T. O. M. Sopwith.

Fairey, who owns Shamrock, V, Sir Thomas Lipton's last International Challenger, has been engaging a Portsmouth crew of selected professionals to race Shamrock throughout the 1935 season.

"I've given serious thought to an American's Cup challenge," Fairey said, "but that's as far as it has gone."

EXPLODING ALCOHOL LAMP FATAL TO PUPIL

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Washington, Feb. 2 (CP)— A group in Illinois has set out to glorify the hog. Dr. John B. Mohler, head of the bureau of animal industry here is sorry he can't help.

Press of business made him turn down an invitation to a banquet Monday night at Bloomington, Ill., for the "glorification of the American hog for its contribution to the welfare of mankind." The affair is planned as a "big dinner," in observance of ground hog eve.

Spokane, Wash., Feb. 2 (CP)— P. I. Newman, unemployed the last four years, found an 1804 dollar among his change and asked a bank teller about its value.

Pointing out that it was badly worn, the teller offered him "a good dollar" for it.

Then Newman took his dollar to the Federal Reserve Bank where, he said, they told him it was worth $2,500.

Protection, Kas., Feb. 2 (CP) — The brotherhood organization of the Garfield Methodist Church is going to try to capture one of the thrills of the old West. Members have purchased a buffalo and plan to stage a hunt in 4,000 acre pasture.

They plan to serve the steak as church dinner—if they bring home the buffalo.

From John Wawde he purchased a bottle "of 17-year-old stuff" that he said turned out to be burnt sugar and water. No kick. When Wawde approached him to make another sale Stank decided he said to deliver a kick himself along with a few punches.

In court, Wawde was fined $100 for disorderly conduct. Said he to Stank:

"You've got no kick coming. World's Fair visitors paid $5 for that same stuff last summer."

. . . .

Philadelphia, Feb. 2 (CP) — Modesty undoubtedly is a virtue but patrolman Fred Evans was in too hot a spot to argue about it.

He had fought his way to a second-storey bedroom of a burning house only to have Bertha Wusch, 18, and modest, refuse to leave her room because she was wearing only her nightgown.

Wasting no words he picked her up bedclothes and all and carried her to safety.

Memphis, Tenn., Feb. 2 (CP)— Maybe the fellow who took it "just stuck it in his vest pocket and walked away," but Milton W. Sweet is looking for his handmade baby automobile.

The car, just 52 inches long and 18 inches high and operated by a Washington machine motor, was stolen from a street curb where Sweet had left it when he entered a cafe.

Sweet, Memphis mechanic, recently completed the automobile after working on it a year. Because its motor is only three fourths horsepower, Shelby County authorities would not sell him a state license. They said go on, drive it, and forget about the license.'"

One of the first essentials to proper driving in winter weather is to forget the speed limits. Concentrate on careful driving and you will find that you are far below the legal limit permitted for more favorable conditions. Drive slowly so that it will not be necessary to come to a sudden stop. Apply your brakes slowly and keep your clutch engaged. You will stop just as quickly and you will avoid side-slipping.

Linking of Fisch and Violet Sharpe Seen in The Hauptmann Defence

ALIBI JARRED

Reilly Pinning Faith on Gang Theory of Kidnapping

Hunterdon County Courthouse, Flemington, N.J., Feb. 2—Of all the bewildering narratives that have been told under oath in this courtroom, the strangest one came out Friday when counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann produced testimony designed to prove that Isador Fisch and Violet Sharpe kidnapped the Lindbergh baby and carried it across the Hudson River into New York.

No Rest for Dead

There is no rest for the dead in this case.

Violet Sharpe, housemaid in the home of Mrs. Dwight Morrow, grandmother of the murdered baby, committed suicide just when state police were about to question her concerning the kidnapping.

Peter J. Sommers is the man who told all this. He used to be a fingerprint expert in New York City, and must have made 500 court appearances in his day. But never has a witness in this trial been so shaken and rattled by cross-examination, not even Millard Whited who came down out of the Sourland mountains unable to read and unable to grasp the meaning of the legal terms flung at him by lawyers.

Sommers was brought into court as a defense witness, but for some bewildering reason Edward J. Reilly, chief of the Hauptmann legal staff, never did draw from him a connected narrative of what he saw and heard at midnight on the night the Lindbergh baby was stolen. It was only under cross examination by Attorney General David T. Wilentz that his story began to take shape and substance.

This is what Sommers said happened:

On March 1, 1932, he was at Fairview, N.J., giving instructions in fingerprinting. Near midnight, he got on the Weehawken ferry, bound for New York.

"There were two men on the boat" he said. "One was five feet, four inches tall; one was five feet nine inches tall. They were smoking cigarettes."

30 Witnesses Heard in Case

Ontario, Calif., Feb. 2—About 30 minor witnesses were examined in a private session at the city hall here Friday in preparation for the trial of Harold W. Vermilyea at Belleville, Ont., on charges of murdering his aged mother with a hatchet.

Vermilyea, Ontario, Calif., fruit broker, insisted after his arrest a few months ago in Los Angeles he was not out of California at the time his mother was killed but authorities contended he could have made a quick plane trip to Canada.

The examination yesterday was before T. W. Duckworth, San Bernardino lawyer, acting as special commissioner for the Canadian Government. British Consul S. T. Hankey of Los Angeles represented the Crown and Lester G. King of San Bernardino appeared as attorney for Vermilyea.

Sharks Waited for Human Flesh As Mariners Battled Fire on Ship

Hamilton, Bermuda, Feb. 2 (CP)— Grim-faced British mariners, still feeling the effects of fire that disabled their vessel at sea and claimed one of their number, rested here today as a survey of the tanker Valverda was begun.

Towed 800 miles by the British training ship Frobisher, the oil-laden Valverda was brought into Hamilton harbor by two naval tugs last night, when Captain T. C. Thomas told how his 36 men had battled flames for three days and three nights without sleep while sharks waited for human flesh.

But by rigging a provisional main trysail the crew kept the tanker headed into the wind, preventing the flames from spreading forward to the highly inflammable cargo of 13,250 tons of oil.

"It would have been bad if we had been forced to take to the water," declared Captain Thomas. "We could see nothing but sharks around us—waiting and increasing in numbers daily as fire threatened the ship. We had only one lifeboat that could be used. The other four went like matchwood as the flames gutted the engine room and after part of the poop deck."

The fire, which broke out on Jan. 21 while the Valverda was bound from Curacao to Rotterdam, claimed the life of third engineer R. Taylor the first day. Taylor and fifth engineer J. Mann were burned when they dashed from the engine room through a wall of flame. The third engineer died a few hours later.

ALCOHOL LAMP BURSTS IN CLASS ONE SCHOLAR DIES

Several Other Children Suffer Burns at Winterbourne

POLICE BEGIN PROBE

Chemistry Class Scene of Fatal Explosion

Kitchener, Ont., Feb. 2 (CP) — Ten-year-old Florence Scroggie is dead and several other children are suffering from burns as a result of the explosion of an alcohol lamp during a chemistry period at the Winterbourne School, 12 miles north of here. The girl died in the Kitchener-Waterloo Hospital early today. Four or five other children whose names have not been learned were less seriously burned. Provincial Police are investigating.

NARROW FILMS TO BE REVIEWED

Clusa Bureau May Decide to Inspect Educational Films

Toronto, Feb. 2 (CP)—Motion pictures of the 16 millimetre class intended for commercial use may be reviewed in future by the Ontario Censor Bureau, J. B. Hardwicke, chairman, announced today.

Standard size of movie films reviewed by the board is 35 millimetres, Mr. Hardwicke said, but review of the 16 millimetre films will not entail great difficulty in adapting the bureau's apparatus. Until recently the 16 millimetre class was never regarded as necessary for censorship, Mr. Hardwicke said, as it was used by educational bodies and in private homes. Then came one or two cases where these films were shown commercially.

Mr. Hardwicke also announced he was going to order the picture "Ten Days That Shook the World", be submitted to the bureau for review. Considerable difficulty developed in Sudbury when it was proposed to exhibit this picture.

BUYING PROBE BRINGS IN TAXES

Long Series of Sessions Concluded at Cost of $300,000

The Mail and Empire says:

Ottawa, Feb. 2—The Royal Commission on price spreads and mass buying which concluded its lengthy series of investigations Friday, will return a substantial dividend to the Federal treasury, but an even greater one to certain producing groups in the country.

The estimated cost of the inquiry to the public purse is something in excess of $300,000. As against this expenditure, however, the investigations carried out by auditors of the commission uncovered several cases in which corporations had not met their income tax liabilities in full, and, under pressure of collection from the department of national revenue a sum estimated at half a million dollars was realized for the Federal treasury.

In addition—and even more substantial—has been the benefit to the tobacco industry of Ontario and Quebec as a result of an agreement for the purchase of this year's crop which the large tobacco companies made, after first the commission and then the Government, through the marketing board, lent its good offices. It is estimated that for a smaller crop of tobacco than last year, the growers this year are receiving close to $2,000,000 more.

The commission also considers that it was instrumental in the better price which tomato growers received from the canners during the past Summer.

Altogether, the commission sat 123 days. Some 9,000 pages of evidence has been taken, and the estimated wordage is placed at 7,500,000. The commissioners plan to get down immediately to digesting this mass of data and the general expectation is that a report will be submitted to parliament within the time limit of one month.

State vs Hauptmann

(BY THE ASSOCIATED PRESS)

The State's Charge:	Hauptmann's Answer:
Bruno Richard Hauptmann entered the Lindbergh nursery between 7 and 10 p.m., March 1, 1932, stole Baby Charles A. Lindbergh from his crib and carried him down a breaking ladder to his death.	Bruno Richard Hauptmann was in a bakery-restaurant in the Bronx, 60 miles or more from the Lindbergh home, on the night of March 1, 1932.
Hauptmann, in the opinion of experts, wrote the 14 ransom notes which followed the kidnapping.	Hauptmann, in the opinion of experts, did not write the ransom notes.
Hauptmann was seen in a car with a ladder the day of the crime on a road leading to the Lindbergh home.	Two men, neither Hauptmann, were seen in a car with a ladder, and they asked direction to the Lindbergh home.
Hauptmann collected $50,000 ransom from John F. (Jafsie) Condon, intermediary, in a Bronx graveyard on the night of April 2, 1932.	Hauptmann was at home the whole evening of April 2, 1932, enjoying a musicale with friends.
Hauptmann was found to be in possession of $14,600 of Lindbergh ransom notes.	The ransom money was given to Hauptmann for safe keeping in an unopened shoe box by Isador Fisch who later died in Germany.
Hauptmann spent a ransom note at a theatre on Nov. 26, 1933, prior to the time he said Fisch gave him the money.	Hauptmann was never in the theatre, and was guest of honor at a birthday party on the evening of Nov. 26, 1933.
A board was taken from Hauptmann's attic for use in the kidnap ladder.	Denied.
Hauptmann's plane was used in construction of the ladder.	Hauptmann hadn't used the plane since 1928.
The only chisel missing from Hauptmann's kit was a ¾-inch chisel, of the size of a chisel used on the kidnap ladder and found near the crime scene.	There were three chisels missing from the kit, and chisel found near crime scene was not his.
Hauptmann's assets increased more than $44,000, including the ransom cache, after payment of ransom.	Isador Fisch owned ransom cache and furnished cash for stock purchases which were computed as Hauptmann's assets.

HIGHWAY REVENUE MUCH INCREASED

Third of Increase Due to Rising Gas Tax Revenues

TORONTO, Feb. 2.—(CP)— Ontario Department of Highways showed a $2,584,999 total revenue increase for the first quarter of the province's fiscal year compared with the same month of 1933-1934, according to a statement from the Department.

Nearly a third of the increase was due to rising gasoline tax revenues. The net tax collections in this period turned $3,379,549 into the Ontario Treasury. For the first quarter of the preceding year these revenues amounted to $3,470,300 or $909,249 less than in the current year.

The motor vehicle branch, with a total revenue of $2,597,084 shows an increase of more than $1,500,000 over figures for the first three months of the fiscal year 1933-34.

ARMS EQUALITY GERMAN DEMAND CASTS SHADOW

Goebbels Speaks Out Aggressively Against League

EQUALITY RIGHTS

"We Want Armaments Not to Make War But For Peace"

Berlin, Feb. 2 C.P.-Havas) —Germany cast a shadow over the 'peace' meetings in London today between French and British statesmen, when the speech of Propaganda Minister Paul Joseph Goebbels once more informed the delegates there, and the world in general, the Reich would demand equality of rights and equality of armaments.

In his aggressive speech he struck out boldly at the League of Nations and indicated Germany's withdrawal had been caused by failure of the world to recognize Germany's position as a nation and as a league member deserving the same rights as other member nations.

"Regardless of what formula is evolved at London, Rome or Paris our acceptance hinges on whether we receive equality of rights," Goebbels declared. "We do not want any moral equality, we want the same rights as others, including those applying to armaments," he added. "We do not want these armaments to make war but for peace. Peace can be maintained only by force and if we are attacked it would not be the League of Nations which would help us."

GANGLAND CAREER ENDED IN CHAIR

State Penitentiary, Richmond, Va., Feb. 2.—(AP)—Gangland careers of murder, kidnapping and robbery ended tody in the electric chair for Robert Mais and Walter Legenza.

Mais, still suffering from six machine gun bullet wounds went first at 7.50 a.m. Saturine, poker-faced Legenza followed 16 minutes later at 8.06 a.m.

They were electrocuted for the murder of Ewell M. Huband during a mail truck robbery here last March ninth. The notorious tri-State gang which they led, however, had a record of two known murders and several suspected killings, a kidnapping and numerous robberies.

Shivering in the chill air of a winter daybreak, Mais told superintendent Rice M. Youell, that he was not present at the slaying of Huband but that he was present, when the robbery was planned. Legenza maintained a stoical silence.

Mais walked to the chair accompanied by two guards. Legenza was taken in a wheel chair, unable to walk because of two broken legs suffered in leaping over an embankment to escape Philadelphia police.

Last hour spiritual ministrations and prayers were said by prison chaplain R. V. Lancaster and Colonel Fred Seller of the Salvation Army.

Both men refused breakfast before electrocution.

A witness said neither showed a lack of nerve at the last. He said Mais appeared to mumble something but that it was inaudible.

The bodies were removed from the prison shortly after the execution. They were claimed by Mrs. Elizabeth Mais, mother of Robert.

Elaborate precautions against the last minute effort on the part of gang associates to "spring" the men were taken by prison authorities. Lines of policemen were outside the prison entrance and witnesses to the executions were carfully searched. Even the guns of city detectives who entered the prison were taken away.

PLANE SEARCHES ICY LAKE WATERS FOR 3 FISHERMEN

Fog And Poor Visibility Make Search Difficult

HOURS' VAIN HUNT

Men Marooned in 40-foot Fishing Boat Sighted at Midnight

Bronte, Ont., Feb. 2 (CP)—Lt. Leigh Capreol took off from Toronto in an aeroplane early today to scour Lake Ontario for the three fishermen caught in a boat in shifting ice floes more than 24 hours. There was a fog and visibility was poor.

Capt. Willard Pickard of the Rouille, came here for instructions and was expected to renew the search for Byron Dorland, Kenneth McDonald and Louis Joyce later this morning. He carried five fishermen of this village, 12 miles east of Hamilton, and searched from 1 a.m. until after eight o'clock without success.

The men were marooned in their 40-foot fishing boat five miles from shore when two boats under William Bray and Milton Dorland of Bronte sighted them at midnight. They came within half a mile of them and could see their boat plainly under flares the stranded men had lighted but ice prevented their getting nearer. Later the flares went out and they were not visible again.

FROST NOT AS DEEP AS LAST YEAR

This winter hasn't been as cold as that experienced one year ago. Public works department officials of the city offer proof. Last year they point out, the frost had been found in the ground at a measured depth of from five to six feet at various places. This year, where excavation work has been necessary, it is found that the frost has gone from three to four feet in the ground.

CITY ENGINEER INSPECTS TOWER

Approximate over the fact that further loose sections of the decorative structure of the upper part of the city hall tower may fall and create damage, city engineer Chas. A. Most, together with local contractors made a tour of the upper section of the tower on Friday in an effort to determine the possible cost of repairs to the building. Under the direction of Alderman Thos. Marshall, chairman of Market and City Property, a full report of the condition of the tower will be presented council on Monday evening.

"If I had my way, I'd have all this loose coloration taken off," commented the alderman after the inspection.

One west age a piece of brick and concrete work as large as a large fruit fell from the tower to the city walk over one hundred feet below, narrowly missing one of a group of men standing underneath.

STOCK REPORTED WELL FATTENED

A surplus of grain garnered from excellent crops in the action last fall is coming in handy for farmers of this district, it was pointed out by Mr. Wm. Michael, district seed inspector of the local office. A shortage may crop and a shortage of other feed for their livestock is being augmented by the farmers' stock of grain. Stock is reported to be well fattened and conditioned for the winter in excellent shape due to the fairly plentiful supply of the grain.

INCREASE SHOWN IN BANK DEPOSITS

A noticeable increase in Penny Bank deposits in local schools is revealed in the report issued by the Department of Education this week. Belleville schools with a percentage of 41 deposited, raised 46th place in schools of Ontario for deposits. Trend was listed in eighty-third place.

GOVERNMENT MAP OF DOCK SECURED

A large-scale map containing a complete plan of the harbor front, from which end of the city and the new dock extensions in the local harbor now under construction has been given the city engineer's office by the Dominion Department of Public Works following several days' work by department surveyors in this city some weeks ago.

The map was turned over to the city as a gesture by the department for the assistance given the surveyors by city engineer Chas. Most in locating local beach marks and providing data.

Interested citizens who wish to gain some knowledge of the present dock extension will find complete details on the map now hanging in the office.

JANUARY FIRE LOSS IS HEAVY

Belleville's fire loss this year may be considerably above that of last year, it is revealed by the report of Fire Chief Wm. Lynch for the month of January just ended. During the month a total of 31 calls were responded to, out of this number some $8,000.00 loss is estimated by the department. Several of the fires were minor ones, in which a heavy start had been made before the alarms to the department could be turned in. The month's total so far is approximately two thirds of the total loss for the whole year of 1934, it is reported.

CAR THIEVES BUSY AT BROCKVILLE

Local and provincial police were informed of the theft early today and a section of police guarded the entrance to the city immediately keeping an all morning watch upon all entrances.

According to information received from Brockville, the robbers entered three garages, stole a Chevrolet coach bearing the 1935 license plates number Ontario HX-532. The car was painted maroon and had a black fender on the front left fender. A number of samples of tobacco were in the car, while the accessories stolen from other garages included a Westinghouse automobile radio, two battery automobile heaters and three automobile motoring robes. Other smaller articles in the motor accessory lines were also among the articles reported missing.

The robbers made the third in a short period of time reported from the Brockville area.

BARLEY GROWERS GIVEN AWARDS

Addressed by J. W. MacKay, District Seed Inspector

A successful meeting of barley growers of the district who had entered the barley competition this year arranged by the Association of Ontario and Quebec Brewers was held in the Court House on Mr. Wm. Michael, seed inspector for this district, on Friday afternoon. The samples of barley exhibited by the local growers at the meeting arranged under the auspices of the Belleville Agricultural Society were among the best shown in a lengthy period.

The following were awarded the winners of the competition in order named:

Addison Coulter, Foxboro; R. Vandervalker, Foxboro; T. B. Wall and Son, Foxboro; Dave Thrasher, Belleville; J. M. Carr, Stirling, and Oscar Parks, Bloomfield. A purse of $105.00 was divided among the winners.

During the meeting which was presided over by Mr. Dave Thrasher, chairman, J. W. Mackay, district seed inspector of Ottawa, gave a brief address on the growth and development of malting barley.

Low Points of Mercury Since 1925 are Given

"To settle a friendly bet," writes a reader of the Daily Ontario Intelligencer, "will you publish a few of the below zero temperatures we had last winter? A friend of mine, a newcomer to the city, insists that 29 below zero is more than we have ever had in Belleville."

1926—17 below Feb. 20.
1927—16 below Jan. 15.
1928—8 below Feb. 25.
1929—16 below Feb. 20.
1930—26 below Feb. 6.
1933—3 below Dec. 29.
1934—39 below Feb. 9.
1935—So far this season the lowest point 30½ below Jan. 30.

Although some criticism is made from time to time regarding the official temperatures given out by the city pump house, it is pointed out that two government thermometers are used and checked constantly for recording. The thermometers, of expensive type have a minimum mark of 80 below for registration.

A variation of from four to five degrees in these official temperatures may be noted at other "cold spots" in the city occasionally.

Groundhog Sees No Shadow

A long reporter with a scrap of notepaper and stub of pencil in hand wandered through the pastures of Thurlow Township early today seeking an interview. Dark clouds lowered over the district. Shrill wind, blew from the north. Thick snow crunched underneath. The day was cold, and the reporter shivered. Tracing Manasia Corbmak to his lair was a chilly job. But finally the reporter was rewarded. From a hole in the south side of the hill came tiny squeakings. Kneeling sharply at the entrance the reporter bent to listen. There was silence, then: "Yow, go," came a muffled squeak. "No, you go," came a deeper squeak which evidently belonged to the head of the house. Again silence. Then after an interval a sharp face popped from the dark entrance. Shoe button eyes gazed questioningly at the reporter; long whiskers twitched nervously.

"Oh, it's you." A glint of recognition appeared.

"Today," firmly asserted the reporter, "is Groundhog Day, February 2nd, you know. All good groundhogs are out looking for shadows.

"Yes . . . But I have nothing to say for the present." The sharp face ducked back again. A straggling ray of sunshine darted across the snow covered pasture and disappeared again into a clump of woods. The reporter turned to go. A whiskered face again appeared at the entrance to the burrow.

"So we're both just where we started from" he squeaked again. "Come back again in about six weeks' time and I'll be able to give you some more information that might be useful. If I said anything just now it might be used against me. Goodbye."

And on Saturday the ground hog did not see his shadow and there were no signs that the sun would be shining very shortly.

Police News

Yesterday's moderation of the weather allowed transients to once again hit the open road with the result that an increased number of them slept in the cell block at the police station last night when nineteen transients registered at the sergeant's desk. They were instructed to "move on" when liberated this morning.

Continued complaints from a downtown hotel resulted in the police investigating unnecessary disturbances early this morning. Upon the arrival of the police it was discovered, that large transports, while parked on lower Front street with their engines in operation, were annoying the hotel guests. The various drivers were instructed to discontinue this practice. Local police authorities are in possession of a gold ring left at headquarters yesterday.

A marked increase in the number of 1935 motor license plates was observed locally today, following yesterday's final warning. A check-up by police on the market square this morning resulted in one lone motorist being apprehended for not displaying his 1935 licence plates. The delinquent was informed that new 1935 markers would be necessary before he could move his vehicle, under the penalty of the present law. Short spells of light flickering rain, just from on the streets and highways as it fell this morning made motor travel rather hazardous. Traffic officers on duty issued warnings slow down traffic under the prevailing conditions, subsequently ordering that all dangerous curves and hills be immediately sanded to protect the motor traffic.

No arrests were necessary in the city during the past 24 hours and no session of police court was held locally today. Magistrate E. J. Butler, K.C., who has been confined to his home through continued illness for the past ten days, is reported to be much improved in health and expected to resume his position on the Bench within the week.

RESERVE SEAT PLAN IS OPENED

Claim "Showboat Days" Will be Enjoyed by Residents

The committee in charge of tickets for the Kinsmen Club's Big Musical Comedy "Showboat Days" are delighted with the generous support which they received from the citizens of Belleville and the surrounding districts.

The reserve seat plan opened in Sills' Book Store and it was indeed gratifying and very encouraging to the Kinsmen in their endeavours to assist underprivileged children in securing proper optical treatment. To date some five hundred and forty people have already signified their intention of being present on the nights of February 5th and 6th, in the Collegiate Auditorium by reserving their seats.

The seat plan will be open daily from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m., with the exception of to-day and Monday when the plan will remain open until 9 p.m.

The Kinsmen assert with perfonable smile, that "Showboat Days" will be the most entertaining and elaborate production ever put on by local stage in many years. Certainly never before has a show of this description carried as much scenery and costumes, there being three thousand pounds of beautiful stage settings and gorgeous gowns.

The cast of players are letter perfect in their parts and the chorus exacute their steps with the precision of professional artists. The by-word at the rehearsal hall is "On with the Show" and we can assure all lovers of musical comedy that when the final curtain comes down they will leave the theatre with a feeling of satisfaction and also "Showboat Days" they have assisted the Kinsmen in their work among the underprivileged child.

'Canadian' Pays Fine Tribute

The Canadian, the official journal of the Canadian National Railways in its issue today says:

"Extensive renovations in the main buildings and residences undertaken last June were still in progress at the time of going to press. As the work of reorganizing the educational work of the School in accordance with the policy of the Minister of Education proceeds the alterations required by the Acting Superintendent, Mr. Harold Hollon was approved by administrator in order to ensure proper supervision of the repair and renovation work that was being carried on. This has now been completed, all of the buildings have been painted and redecorated, the grounds have been cleaned up, new places reseeded and a number of shrubs and trees have been completed, and planted with bulbs artistically arranged, all necessary repairs have been completed, the electric-light system, as was greatly needed, has been modernized, and the whole plant put into first-class condition.

"Having so efficiently finished the work assigned to him, Mr. Hollon's services were no longer required, so he has been transferred to the more responsible position of Administrator of the mental hospital at Hamilton, assuming his new duties in February.

"During the time that Mr. Hollon has been a member of the Staff he has made himself persona grata with all at the School. He took a real interest in the Dramatic Club and the various other activities of the pupils, who, as expressed by themselves in another column, were very grateful for his kindness and generosity. On Thursday afternoon the Association of Teachers and Instructors entertained Mr. and Mrs. Hollon and the Misses Hollon at an afternoon tea in token of their appreciation of the interest they had taken in the Association, of the many courtesies extended to them and the generous hospitality they have displayed whenever occasion offered.

STREET SCENE

Street scene:

A well dressed man triumphantly clutching a thin, familiar appearing parcel emerges from the office of the local license issuer on Front St., Friday afternoon.

Hurrying down the street he approaches a sleek car standing at the curb and slides the new plates out of their wrappings. The container is thrown to the roadway. Delving under the year seal he emerges with a shiny screw driver. With deft motions the old license is removed from the front bumper, the new one placed. The same operation is carried out at the rear of the machine. Both plates are loosed to the road in company with the paper wrapping.

The man enters the car, kicks the engine into action, backs out from the curb and disappears through the traffic safely equipped with the new plates. Two old plates and their paper container lie at the curbside.

NEW PRESIDENT OF HORT. SOCIETY

Dr. Paul Resigns as Official of Organization

Tweed.—Miss Marjorie Morrison, formerly in the employ of Weddell-Greasmyn as bookkeeper and stenographer, has gone to Ottawa where she had been engaged as stenographer in the office of the Assistant Minister of National Defence.

The temperature reached a new low of 29 degrees below zero on Wednesday morning. Unofficial registrations, were as low as 40 degrees below zero.

A successful bridge and euchre was held on Tuesday night at the home of Miss Daisy Mattlejohn in aid of the Public Library. Eight tables of auction bridge and one of euchre were played. Bridge prize winners were Mrs. Alfred Davis and Mr. E. M. Connor. Mrs. P. T. Bowlby received the prize for euchre. The proceeds amounted to $9.50. A dainty lunch was served at the conclusion of the bridge. The arrangements were made by Mrs. McTague, Mrs. Lockie and Mrs. Percival. Appreciation to Miss Mattlejohn for opening her home was voiced by Mr. Moffat and Mr. Connor.

Miss Joyce Morrison will shortly go to Ottawa to enter Ottawa Hospital to take a course in nursing.

Mrs. Hagerman of Bancroft who was formerly in charge of Tweed Hospital, was taken to Kingston early this week where she underwent a serious operation. Many Tweed friends trust she may have a speedy and complete recovery.

Mr. D. H. Morrison has again been appointed to membership on the High School Board as county representative. The retirement of Mr. J. C. Mikel from Village Council esentative left a vacancy which was filled by the appointment of Mr. Wallace Lodge to the High School Board.

At the annual meeting of Tweed Horticultural Society held a short time ago, Dr. Paul Resigned as president. Since that time he has found it impossible owing to the pressure of duties to assume this added responsibility and at a subsequent meeting of the directors of the Horticultural Society and added to the relieved of his office. This was done with regret as Dr. Paul is an ardent lover of flowers, however, consented to act as first vice-president. The office left vacant by his resignation was filled by electing Rev. R. R. Nicholson as President. The latter is a close student of floricul-re and the Society is assured of a successful year with him at the head.

The annual Horticultural Convention will be held in Toronto on February 21st and 22nd and Mrs. Harry Coulter of Chapman will represent the local Society. The delegate's report of this meeting will be presented on February 26th.

It was also decided to again sponsor a bedding-out bulb which met with such favour last year among the younger boys and girls.

A painful injury was sustained by Jack Cox, employee of Tweed Foundries when a small quantity of molten metal splashed into his eyes. He was taken to Tweed Hospital and is rapidly improving although it seemed at first that there might be serious impairment of the sight.

St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church held their annual congregational meeting on Wednesday evening with a splendid attendance. Considerable progress was shown for the year. The membership was increased by the addition of 27 new members. One death occurred during the year. Financial reports from the church organizations showed a healthy state. A vote of thanks was moved by Mr. W. A. Masters to Rev. W. A. Hunter for his excellent spiritual leadership during the year. Lunch was served after the meeting.

Mr. H. W. Crosbie, District Forester, went to Harlowe on business on Thursday last week.

Officers of the United Church Mission Band were elected at their January meeting as follows:—

President—Ruth Foster.

Vice-Presidents—Marion Moon.

Secretary—Gladys McGuire.

Treasurer—Mrs. W. J. McCutcheon.

Work Friends' Secretary—Marjorie McTaggart.

FLOODS RAVAGE BRITISH COLUMBIA KILLING 22

Widespread damage was done to store stock and household furnishings in the worst flood conditions experienced in the history of Victoria. From January 20 to 22 inclusive, six inches of rain fell inundating many low-lying areas. Above is a picture of a district grocery store in Victoria, partially submerged. Row-boat ferries were established in seven or eight districts as TOP photo shows. Railway lines, telephone companies, power plants and bus lines all suffered a heavy toll of damage. Landslides occurred at many points on Vancouver Island, disrupting traffic and endangering lives. Twenty-two people lost their lives throughout the province as result of storms.

Highway numbers thirty-five. On Monday, February 4, half of this number will go to the north for a velopment at St. Ola on a two weeks' shift, to be followed after that interval by the second half for a period of like duration. This promises to be adequately for the employment for the next few months.

Mr. N. R. Beatty has assumed the management of the local International Bank. Mr. Beatty has had a lengthy experience both as player and manager and this should prove of value to the players if they will but accept advice. Mr. Jerry Quinn, former coach, found the dual position of player-manager too arduous and gave up the latter end of his duties.

CELEBRATE 20TH ANNIVERSARY OF WEDDING

Selby, Feb. 2—A most pleasant time was spent at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bexsmith, the evening of Jan. 28th when a large concourse of neighbours and friends gathered in the nature of a surprise party to celebrate the 20th anniversary of their wedding. After a few pleasant social hours, music was given by the McKnight family and a humorous dialogue was given by Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Smith. Then Mr. Smith called the bride and groom of twenty years ago to the centre of the drawing room and read the following address:—

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Bexsmith.

"As relatives and friends in Selby we gather here to-night to offer our congratulations on this twentieth anniversary of your marriage, and to wish you much happiness for the years to come. It gives us great pleasure to look back with you over these years and to assure you of the respect and affection with which we regard you.

As neighbors we have had years of comradship together and each of us has the memory of many a turn you have done, some timely help offered or gentle and generous liy. In both work and service we have found you to be good neighbors ready taking your part in every thing that had to be done. Your reliability when you agreed to undertake a responsibility has long been known and depended upon.

Many varied interests in Selby owe a debt to you both. Trustee Board, W.M.S. and choir have never lacked your steady and loyal support and hard work on their behalf.

We all trust that this anniversary will mark for you the beginning of many more years of happy married life and we hope that they will be spent among tis here.

"On behalf of the community,

"Jos. Tate.

"W. A. McLeod."

Mr. and Mrs. A. Bexsmith were presented with a beautiful mantle clock, a table cover, and several pieces of china.

After the gifts were unwrapped by the bride, Mr. and Mrs. Bexsmith expressed their gratitude for the gifts, as well as for the pleasure of friendship, which is much appreciated on the part of the bride and groom.

When the night was far spent a dainty lunch was served, the unique part of which was the wedding cake with a miniature bride and groom on its summit.

In the wee small hours of the morning the party broke up dispersed wishing the bride and groom many happy returns of the day.

Year of Elections

W. S. MacDiarmid Writes from California On Politics and Other Topics

To the readers of this Great Family Journal a California salutation sends its love for a happy and prosperous New Year. Since it has become a home paper for Greta and myself also, there can be no discrimination. The c ances are there will be some heart aches for the Tories for 1935 is a Reform year. In the new Congress at Washington, the Grits could not find enough cabinet so they had to go over and take some Tory seats on the Republican and Socialist Seats. This is the first time in the history of American politics that such an overriding majority has occurred. Premier Bennett can see the handwriting on the wall. Reading his speechs of late makes me think of the boy whistling going through the spots. He is going to get the air just as President Hoover got it. When times are bad its too bad for the party in power, it makes no difference that the party is not to blame for the hard times. They must take the blame and be thrown out of office for there is no other way for the sovereign voter to let off steam. After the tumult and the shouting dies, and the Tories have defeated only means you will be Grits sitting in Tory seats. To the Tory supporters you have been doing time and the majority of voters will be just where they were. They will have had many arguments and like the Scotch who never took part in a fight ought be proud of it. Politics are a sort of necessary evil. In the days of good old David Harum's dog, keeps you scratching so you forget. Politics scratching so you forget. "I am my brother's keeper". No one takes it seriously. We ought to be brothers in a great human family. Politicians and civil servants would be a long time at work making the world safe for Democracy but they have not accomplished much. The world is a tough place for Grit or Tory to make a living. Premier Bennett is going to do a lot if he can get enough votes to defeat only means you will be great Dominion. The skeptics rise up and say they have you been doing these past few years and the Premier has no alibi. What price glory?

To those who do not put too much faith in parties or politics the sickness of Canada and the United States is beyond the power of the political economist to cure. There is much hope in getting a new deal when the politicians are using the old deck of cards. The recent investigations of big business in Canada and the United States makesperare was wrong. There are so seven ages of man. There are only two, the marble age and the dollar age. If your readers will look back to their younger days they will remember how the smart boys got all the marbles. How they would strut around with their pockets full and no one could play. Then there would be a conference of the leaders of the losers and they would suggest a new deal. If they refused they would be stood on their head and the marbles shook out. Presto would be resumed and everyone was happy. Now the smart boys have all our dollars. It is a fact that mankind does not profit by past history. We hear a great deal about the failure of capitalism and that is all we have to go. No one has anything better to take its place and we know that someone has to be in the driver's seat.

California has just passed West Hastings which saw some high pressure politics: battles when Harry Corby was one of the principals. Upton Sinclair got up a great fight and was almost elected. There were nine E.P.I.S. candidates in the field and seven were elected. The capitalist papers and the old line politicians try to make it lose so though Upton was annihilated but he got nearly 900,000 votes. His organization is still working and you will hear more of Upton in the future than ever before. He has written fifty books. Its too bad he kept on when he had written 49. His one book 'The Profits of Religion', cost him the governorship. He called Saint Patrick a snake charmer, and in the English Episcopal Church in which he was brought up was composed of members as dried up and dusty as their prayer books. He said the Christian Scientists did not believe in sickness but they make millions selling a book. If you will read it you will cure you of diseases they say don't exist. The Los Angeles Times would had its paper filled with quotations from this book each day and it was using black face1 type. The churches got after him. Even Sister Aimee who never took part in politics before came out against Upton. It was a hard fought battle and it is believed to have cost the Republicans more than it cost to elect Roosevelt. Upton's motto Marriman says he did not spend much but had no idea what his friends put in the campaign.

Governor Merriman comes from Long Beach and Upton Sinclair charged 25 cents to the public to hear his speeches and he had larger crowds than Governor Merriman based all his campaign speeches on porations raised the old William Jennings Bryan sentence—"If you vote for Sinclair you will lose your job." It worked. It always has. It always will. The ordinary run of the mill man should not have a vote. As to the woman voter who won't purify politics when she got a vote —she either votes with her husband or does not go near the voting booth. Two of the great mistakes in politics were when the Romans freed the slaves and the women were given a right to vote.

In future years if the world goes on three great men will have their names high on the roll of honor, Eugene Debs, Clarence Darrow and Upton Sinclair. They pleaded for the under dog always. Yours for the common people.—

W. S. MacDiarmid.

LABATT IS SURE DAVID MEISNER ONE KIDNAPPER

Gruelling Cross Examination Leaves Witness Unshaken

ADJOURN TILL MONDAY

Labatt Mistaken in The Weight of The Accused

By Charles Nichols
Canadian Press Staff Writer

London, Ont., Feb. 2 (CP)—The dramatic personal of Canada's first ransom kidnap trial resumed today.

John D. Labatt, chief Crown witness in the trial of David Meisner charged with abducting the wealthy London brewery president, relaxed at the guarded home of his father-in-law, Leo yesterday he ended his eighth hour of searching cross-examination at the hands of W. G. Bell, K.C., chief of counsel for Meisner.

Bell was still grilling Labatt when court adjourned yesterday until 10:30 Monday. Another four tense hours he had sought to shake the sworn testimony of the 56-year-old brewer he had recognized Meisner as leader of an armed who dragged him from his car near Barnia last Aug. 14.

Laying the background for all witnesse the defence will call, later, Bell drew from Labatt the assertion:

"Meisner never left me for more than half an hour from the morning of Aug. 14 until late the night of Aug. 16."

It was during those 72 hours that Labatt was driven to a Lake Huron cottage, locked in a room in an iron cot, guarded by a man he identified as the frail Cincinnati bookmaker.

Try to Prove Alibi

Bell, who will seek to show Meisner was in Cincinnati with nesyby Covington, Ky., during the days Labatt was held, last night conferred briefly with Mrs. Meisner and Leroy Hall, Covington detective who visited her in London last night. They will later go to the witness stand to testify for the defence.

The defence lawyer yesterday attacked Labatt's description of the man he identified as Meisner. In previous testimony he had referred to the kidnaper as weighing about "175 pounds and athletic in build."

"Does this man look as if he weighed 175 pounds?" the defence lawyer asked the witness, as he peered towards the jury.

"It looks about right," said the tiny, Labatt returned smiling. He had referred to the man as athletic because of his prowess in athletic contests, he explained.

Under cross-examination Labatt would have noticed the while coating over Meisner's blind left eye if he had seen the man as clearly as he said he had.

Seen Captor Closely

Labatt asserted he had not noticed the cataract although he had seen his captor closely.

"I saw it when I came you didn't," agreed Bell, alluding to the defence theory that Labatt was not familiar with adhesive tape during his captivity and he never saw his abductor.

In preliminary evidence Labatt had explained the use of adhesive tape." Under cross-examination he denied the covering was adhesive bandage, saying it was a piece of cut in thin strips and pasted vertically on his face. Bell referred to alls in between the strips, he could see his guard clearly he said. That was all he could see.

The brewer met both attempts with firm denial.

Before the grilling, Labatt appeared flustered.

He had testified his eyes had been bandaged, then felt quick stroke of his eyes with court plaster, while he was held in the Lakefield cottage.

"How did you know he was playing solitaire if your eyes were covered?" Bell asked.

"I could move the felt a little to the left," Labatt replied after a brief tense pause. Then he suddenly added: "He told me."

"Yes, he told him he was playing," J. C. M. German, Crown Prosecutor interjected.

Labatt said he had heard Meisner say: "I can't seem to get old sol"—

ANNUAL MEETING OF CONGREGATION

CANNIFTON UNITED CHURCH

Cannifton, Feb. 2.—The annual congregational meeting of the Cannifton United Church was held in the Sunday School room on Thursday evening. ICE-BREAKER IS SENT TO RESCUE

Three Men Marooned Will be Taken Off Floe Safely

Bronte, Ont., Feb. 2 (CP)—The ice-breaking tug Rouille of the Toronto Harbor Commission grounds is expected through the floe-locked waters of Lake Ontario t...ay in an attempt to rescue three Bronte fishermen, marooned in their boat by the shifting floes five miles from shore.

The men—Byron Durland, Kenneth McDonald and George Sovereign had a 24-hour vigil out on the chilly lake, after leaving their homes in this little fishing village, 30 miles west of Toronto.

Sporadic light flashes, coming out of the darkness that closed over the fishing grounds last night gave the villagers ashore that the men were marooned. Little apprehension for their safety was felt however, the temperature was 20 degrees above zero and it was thought the men would be able to keep their boat in open water, avoiding the ice floes.

Quickly word was relayed to Toronto and the Rouille, under the command of Captain W. F. Pick-ing his ward, and with a crew of five men started to the rescue.

The three marooned men are all experienced fishermen but relatives here said they would not be averse to them in rowboats as soon as their signals were seen.

A strong wind, blowing out of the east from Lake Ontario alternately with the ice slowly beginning to drift, the boats were powerless.

William Sargent, owner of the stranded boat, Ivan McDonald, brother of one of the three men, and William Gray, George Morgan and Sherman Gilliam, villagers, made the last attempt to reach the marooned fishermen.

Motorist Keeps Word With The Magistrate

London, Feb. 2 (CP) — Deputy Magistrate W. B. Hesketon knew an honest man when he saw one.

Victor Bishop of Hamilton paid a fine and $4 in costs assessed against him on a reckless charge.

Early in the hearing case yesterday the Magistrate used his discretion in cancelling Bishop's driving permit for two hours, backdating it about an hour and a quarter so the truck driver would not lose his job. Bishop didn't have the money but promised to come in when he ran between Hamilton and London and pay it. He was just 24 hours keeping his word.

MR. HOLTON'S APPOINTMENT

Announcement this week of the appointment of Mr. Percy Harold Holton, who has been business administrator of the Ontario School for the Deaf here, since last September, to a similar post at one of the largest of the Ontario Government's institutions, the Ontario Hospital at Hamilton, was important and interesting news to the people of Belleville and the surrounding district where Mr. Holton's family has resided since the earliest days of the city's history. It means that in the course of next week he and his family will be leaving for Hamilton. While citizens are pleased at the signal honor which has come to him, they will regret that his new duties make necessary his early departure from Belleville.

Mr. Holton's work at the School for the Deaf, where he has been but a brief few months, has received highest commendation and opened up for him the very important position at the Ontario Hospital.

His ties with this city are of a kind which give his departure from the city of his birth a personal interest for Mr. Holton and his family. The grandson of a former Premier, the late Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who came here from England as a child, the nephew of the late Senator Billa Flint of Confederation Days, the grandson of one of the business pioneers of Belleville and the son of a former well known business man and of a very well known and honored Belleville lady who makes her home with him and who will accompany her son to his new scene of duty, Mr. Holton naturally feels a tug at the heart strings as he prepares to leave. The product of Belleville schools and of the University of Toronto, he had returned to Belleville after his university course to play his part in the development of Belleville, and for over twenty years or more he has been an active figure in the commercial, religious and social life of the city. During the war period as an officer of the Fifteenth Battalion he enlisted and served with distinction and was popular with all ranks. He has had an intimate relationship with boys in Belleville as well as while at College. He is a strong party man, an indefatigable worker and has occupied posts of honor in the Liberal party. As an administrator and executive officer Mr. Holton has made a success and has few equals.

Possessing an engaging personality, Mr. Holton leaves many friends here who wish him success in his new appointment.

U. S. AND WORLD COURT

Explanation of the situation which led to the decision of the United States Senate to stay out of the World Court has been offered by newspapers favorable to the League of Nations in every part of the United States. One writer says, "Minor causes, personal and political, entered into the defeat of the World Court proposal." He claims that the leadership of Senator Robinson was too much at ease and that Robinson continued to tell the President that satisfactory was certain. He says that Mr. Roosevelt was misled and that all in all the supporters of the treaty slept on their oars while opponents got busy on a secret but incessant campaign and "the last minute hullabaloo of telegrams, broadcasting, and violent attacks by a certain group of newspapers on the floor of the detached a few votes that were reckoned sure for ratification." The New York Times calls it "disappointment to the administration," and "a great surprise."

The Times attacks a certain provincial attitude, saying "The adverse action of the Senate is every proof of the persistence in this country of a provincial spirit and of an extreme jealousy of everything that is 'foreign.' There was doubtless a good deal of race feeling in this but the most powerful element was the successful appeal to 'have nothing to do with Europe.' The World Court was established in Europe, many of its judges were Europeans, and therefore we must have nothing to do with the accursed thing. This is partly a left-over and not unintelligible left-over sequel of the war. But it represents a narrow and shortsighted policy. One way to keep out of controversies with European nations would be to join a court where disputes would be settled judiciously and not by precarious or provoking diplomatic means. It was not a truly national but a really parochial policy that found expression in the senate vote . . . The long-time and excellent advocates of the World Court may prefer to have it beaten outright than to have been loaded down with insincere and hypocritical reservations which would have made a farce of ratification and deepened the impression at home as well as abroad that the United States Government is seriously weakened by the apparent intention of the Senate to claim for itself all the power and authority which should belong to the Chief Executive in doing business with other nations."

RURAL SCHOOLS

Dr. Peter Sandiford, director of educational research at the Ontario College of Education, has had something to say about the system of administering rural schools. The whole plan, he says, is an anachronism. There are too many trustees, too much government, and he would make the county the administrative unit, instead of the school section.

There is good sense in the observation. The school-section unit survives, of course, from the old days when each settlement was few and isolated from one another, when communication was difficult. Today conditions have changed, but not the practice, and we have, according to Dr. Sandiford, 16,965 trustees controlling rural schools with 7,118 teachers. Toronto, by contrast, has 3,000 teachers and only twenty trustees.

It should not be difficult to prove that both efficiency and economy would be promoted by county school boards. No doubt the objection will be raised that this form of control would be out of touch with local problems, and some people will see perils in centralization, but it will be agreed that a board with county jurisdiction would attract men of greater experience than are available for individual schools.—Ottawa Journal.

KATHARINE CORNELL'S DOG

Little did I know as I let a gentle tear drop for the canine frailties of Flush that I was adding impetus to a sinister and spreading lie. I have Alex. Woolcott, as they say in the jungle, to blame. It seems that one Sunday night the Town Crier got on the radio and announced that Flush was blind in one eye—a decrepitude now denied.

Comes a breathless, hand-delivered note from Ray Henderson, spokesman for Miss Cornell and champion for the Stage's celebrated spaniel:—

"Let's spike this rumor at once," writes Ray. "Flush is appearing in the big role in "The Barrets of Wimpole Street" when Miss Cornell presents this play in the Martin Beck next month. He is neither blind nor lame and incapacitated, being less than five years old and in full possession of his great acting ability which has distinguished him from coast to coast."

Rumors of his retirement, he thinks, must be the work of those kind old gentlemen who have persisted in making his life miserable ever since he first appeared on Broadway by having him periodically investigated for a sin he has never been guilty of—that of dope.

The rumor is spiked and I trust that Flush is appeased. Incidentally, Ray, will you tell Flush that one of his kids, who now rates expenditure on unspeakable, is lodged at Ruth Gordon's house and is growing tall.—George Ross in N. Y. World Tribune.

RAINBOW-COLORED DANDIES

There has not been much sign of heart fluttering heretofore with respect to the predictions of new clothes for men with the finest colors of the rainbow. Merchant tailors and designers have predicted a billion dollar expenditure on the apparel trades. Canary waistcoats are to come in, they say but Belleville tailors do not expect such a blossoming upon those more sombre-hued clothes worn by Belleville men.

It is said that the amount of replacement purchasing on this continent in all lines is nineteen billion dollars and as the people of the continent in moneyed days spent one-tenth of their retail disbursements on clothes the billion dollars replacement of clothes does not seem abnormal though the expenditure may not be all in one year.

Men in the United States are admittedly raising no objection to their wives dressing well, for they do dress well, but the men themselves are going in for rags and tatters or even in shiny clothing by any means. The male of the species though he has not yet reached the most lurid combination of colors, such as has been promised by the designers of clothing, yet has been rather good to himself. In 1929 retail sales of men's clothing in the United States reached $1,350,000,000 and of women's clothes, $1,450,000,000, or $100,000,000 more than the much smaller half a billion dollars was spent on jewellery, which is a part of dress, and most of this expenditure went to women of course. This shows that man spent seventy-five cents on himself for dress to every dollar his wife spent on herself. Whether these figures hold true for urban Ontario is not guaranteed.

New York Times points out that there is something that men and women think of more than clothes and that is the new motorcar. Motor sales in 1929 were twice what the clothes sales were. A critic in the New York Times speaks of the revolutionary scheme of society on this continent when a nation will spend almost as much on motorcars as it does on the food it eats to keep individuals alive, more than twice as much as is spent on clothing, and nearly four times as much as is spent on housing, the three basic necessities.

It sums up the situation in these words, "Out of every retail American spent dollar six years ago, something between twenty-five and thirty cents went for food and twenty cents went for automotive goods. The heart of our special problem may turn out to be far less profit motive than automotive." The critics wonders, "Are we suffering from a crisis in capitalism or a crisis in locomotion?"

Meanwhile the threat of the appearance of rainbow-colored dandies is heard in the land. How near will the merchant tailors and designers come to the mark in their forecast? As for the smaller cities in Belleville may be taken as a sample, there will be expected some real conservatism in dress before the wondrous color combinations are adopted even by the bravest of the timid but stronger sex.

WHO JOYS IN LIFE

Who lives life gladly all his days
Will gain the gifts for which he prays,
For life is just a simple thing
To wear like any rose in spring.
Each instant conscious it is fair,
And that its fragrance fills the air.
Who joys in life each shining hour
That he receives its priceless dower,
Enriches through his gratitude
Its countless charms, its boundless good.
Life can be perfect as a rose
From its beginning to its close;
Each life a flower God has planned
To grace the garland in His hand.

SERVICE SOCITIES ARE MULTIPLYING which seems to signify that the ageold question of "Am I my brother's keeper" bids fair to be answered. One of the latest service clubs to be organized in Belleville is "The Kinsmen," an organization of young men in business or professional life. There is an age limit in the Kinsmen which distinguishes it from other similar organizations in this field, and it appeared on Broadway by having him periodically investigated for a sin he has never been guilty of—that of dope.

The rumor is spiked and I trust that Flush is appeased. Incidentally, Ray, will you tell Flush that one of his kids, who now rates expenditure on unspeakable, is lodged at Ruth Gordon's house and is growing tall.—George Ross in N. Y. World Tribune.

REGULAR CARE NECESSARY TO BANISH ACNE

Acne is The Medical Name Used For Pimples

By LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright, 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Acne, a name that doctors employ for pimples, is a condition that is quite common, especially during pubesal years. When 75 is present, it invariably makes its victim exceedingly self-conscious; often, indeed, it affects his attitude and course of life.

The acne victim, especially if he has tried many remedies and so far has failed to be cured, is very likely to feel that everybody notices his condition, in fact, he is under the obsession that he is being singled out for comment and ridicule. It often happens, therefore, that such persons become morbid and shut-in, avoid ordinary social contacts and even develop a distinct disinclination to go to school or to work because of their unsightliness.

To be sure, acne may not always be most conspicuous on the face, although this seems to be the rule. Pimples may also appear on the back and chest, and even on the body.

First of all, it should be remembered by those afflicted with acne, that the general health of the body is built up, no amount of local treatment will be effective. Local skin remedies will suffice. In all cases the time of day must be chosen when it must be improved.

Out-of-door exercise is beneficial as a part of regular sleep, avoidance of excesses of all kinds, including alcohol and tobacco. Special attention should be given to the diet.

Yes, the reason why so many youngsters have pimples, girls as well as boys, is because they eat too many sweets like and eat too many sweets. Pastries, candies, cakes and the like, help to produce acne. Fried and made-over dishes, spicy foods, rich sauces and condiments also are prescribed.

Next, constipation, which is so often present in these cases, must be overcome. The best way of course, is to eat plenty of fresh fruits and green vegetables every day. Water should also be drunk between meals, a total of about six glasses a day. A regular practice to establish is the habit of eating stewed prunes or other stewed fruit before retiring. Laxative medication is best avoided, unless it is absolutely necessary as a temporary measure.

Bananas, grapes and dried meats should be shunned. Meat that is broiled may be eaten once a day; fish may be eaten twice a week. Fried eggs are likewise to be avoided, but they may be eaten daily in moderation.

Milk should be taken daily. Buttermilk, or yoghurt, a commercial preparation containing lactic acid bacilli is extremely beneficial.

It is important that the entire skin be kept unusually clean. This can be accomplished with soap and water. The water, however, should not be too hot, as it tends to make the skin be scrubbed or rubbed too hard. Besides, care should be exercised in the selection of a soap. This must be non-irritating soap such as castile.

When the fundamentals of the body are taken care of as outlined above, the use of lotions and similar concoctions is scarcely necessary. They may be employed, if necessary, for soothing or stimulating effects.

No sufferer from acne should, however, become discouraged. With the right treatment, and this may be in different persons, a cure of the major work being done by the patient in bubbles up his fondest hope for most cases may be entertained.

Dr Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

After an attack of acute indigestion, the best plan is to refrain from food altogether. When eating is resumed, liquids such as broth and milk, are best. Meat should be avoided for three days. Solid food should be added to the diet gradually, beginning with baked potato, toast and custard.

UKRAINIAN PRIEST GOES INTO FASTING

Brantford, Ont., Feb. 2 (CP) — Rev. Theodore Pallyck, of St. John's Ukrainian Catholic Church here, has withdrawn from the pastorate and moved to Grimsby as a protest against a ruling by Bishop B. V. Ladyka of Winnipeg that married clergymen may not carry on church duties in his diocese. Similar action has been taken in the case of Rev. Andrew Sarmatiuk, at Oshawa.

GLEANINGS FROM OUR FYLES OF BY-GONE YEARS

Who are the proudest men in Belleville today? Without a doubt President Morley Duff, Manager Jack Phelan and Captain Fink of the Grand Trunk Hockey Team, when their clubmates gave vent in the Bell Telephone cracks in the City League game last night to the tune of 8 to 7. It was one of the best games played in the City League so far and good clean hockey was the order of the evening, and as the score indicates it was no one-sided affair. "Cook" Tallion of basketball fame, was there with bells on and notched the first goal for the railroaders and this was the only goal scored during the first period. We roll on to the last twenty five minutes when the "Phone boys put new life into the game and scored two goals in quick succession, but immediately Capt. Fink reunited his position after repairing his skate, the sides were again turned. Try as they might the 'Phone boys could not overcome the big Midget engine and score again. After about ten minutes of play Tallion added one of his famous long ones and tied the score and in a very few minutes later Arnold scored the winner. Little Hoss York was a daisy on the wing and Chisholm in goal was a marvel. Capt. Fink had as partner on defence Joe Goyer, and with such an organization as this the Hardware boys will have to step high if they intend to hold their own in the City League on Monday next when they meet the Conservatory of Canada's Pioneer Railroad. We must say that the boys who keep the hello machines in order are a splendid outfit and with such "pushers" will make anything an interesting game to the full distance. Brown Bros. was a daisy and Ormond Marshall combined with Carron was a virtual stone wall. Dunberry scored the second goal for the hello boys. The following composed the teams: Grand Trunk: Baker, Fink, Goyer, Tallion, Arnott, Mills and York. Bell Telephone: Brown, Marshall, Smith, McBride, Carron, Dunberry and Smith. Referee, Pinlott.

Following are the names of the players: Sinclair Moore, Sinclair, Mercer, Wallace, Thompson, Moore, C. Dulmage and Silcocks. Shoe Clerks: Bowyer, Wilson, VandervoortHE. GRADE OF BACON UNDER DISPUTE

OTTAWA, Feb. 1.— (CP)—Hon. H. H. Stevens, former Minister of Trade and Commerce, today told the Royal Commission on Mass Buying between 70 and 80 per cent. of the Canadian Bacon sent to the British Market was Grade A, yet J. S. Louden, English agent for Canada Packers, said in a recent interview it was "undoubtedly much inferior to the Danish product."

Mr. Stevens asked Samuel Todd, executive secretary of the Industrial and Development Council of the Canadian Packers Association, how that statement could be reconciled with his commendation of the Canadian Grading System.

In Canada the actual grading is done by packers themselves and bacon is inspected by an official of the Dominion Department of Agriculture, when it reaches England.

Satisfied With Grading

"Your contention yesterday was that the grading by the packers was most efficiently done," said Mr. Stevens. "You are satisfied the grading is the best that can be done under the circumstances."

"I think so."

"The Canada Packers have a substantial interest in the Louden company?" he asked.

"Yes," Todd replied.

"Then do you agree with this statement of Louden: 'It is true, that the price of Canadian bacon in this market is settled weekly by 10 Canadian importers; but our object naturally is to get the highest price?'"

"That would be the Canadian agents," said Todd.

Mr. Stevens continued. The reporter asked Louden why Canadian bacon prices were the lowest of the ten exporting countries, with a range of 12 shillings a bale in favor of Danish.

Bacon Called Inferior

"The reason," Louden was quoted as saying "is found in both quality and quantity of Canadian imports. Every British dealer maintains the Canadian product undoubtedly is much inferior to the Danish.

Asked if he agreed with that, Todd replied "in general that is true".

"Having in mind," said Mr. Stevens, "that Grade A is from 70 to 80 per cent. of the bacon exported.

The Commission questioned Todd about profits made by packers during the depression. Figures, said Mr. Stevens, show in the lowest trough of the depression, at the end of March, 1933, Canada Packers had made net income of 12.17 per cent.

"That was when the farmer was getting 50 per cent of cost for his product without anything for depreciation," commented D. M. Kennedy (U.F.O., Peace River).

From 1927 to 1934 Canada Packers had made $12,000,000 profits before providing for depreciation. How could that be reconciled with Todd's statement of last night the Packers had shared in the losses just as other interests had, Mr. Stevens asked.

The packers took a part in sharing the losses, Todd replied.

"Put it this way," said Chairman W. W. Kennedy, "you mean they didn't make as much money in the lean years as in the fat."

Todd declared he did not mean the packers had suffered to the same degree as the farmers.

Turning to the cattle industry, Todd said one solution of its problems was to restore the United States market.

The Commission adjourned until 2.30.

GERMANY IS CURIOUS ABOUT ENTANGLEMENT

Paris, Feb. 2 (CP-Havas)—Germany wants to know whether participation in the proposed Central European treaties drafted by France and Italy would entangle her in the League of Nations, it was confirmed Friday.

German Ambassador Roland Koester Monday interviewed the French Foreign Minister, asking clarification of several points in the proposed treaties which pledge mutual non-interference with respect to the Danubian States and, notably, a guarantee of Austria's independence.

WOMAN SLAYER GIVEN 20 YEARS

Breaks Down in Court When Judge Passes Sentence

Toronto, Feb. 2.—Twenty years' imprisonment was meted out to Mrs. Violet Haggett, 39, by Mr. Justice Hope in assizes yesterday. A jury had found her guilty of manslaughter in the stabbing to death of her husband while both were drunk.

The woman, half Indian, half French, completely broke down as the severe sentence was pronounced. "Oh, God," she cried, and burst into hysterical sobbing. As she was assisted from the courtroom immediately she continued to cry, "Oh God, Oh God."

She had killed her husband, an ex-sailor, with a 12-inch butcher knife after the two had consumed two pints of alcohol on December 20. The triangle was completed by a colored man, Donaldson, who claimed to have been framed by Haggett and jailed for receiving stolen goods.

"You have been found guilty of manslaughter for the killing of your husband," commented His Lordship in passing sentence, "although you had previously found someone else and lived with him as a husband. What part that may have played in bringing you to this unfortunate plight, you yourself know.

Considerate View

"The jury took a very considerate view of the situation. The charge on which you appeared here was that of murder. By reason of the evidence of drinking, by reason of which you have been incapable of formulating the intention of murder, the jury has seen fit to give you the benefit of that doubt and found you guilty of manslaughter. Nevertheless you may have some thoughts on this yourself Fortunately for you, they took a tolerant view.

GERMAN RIGHT TO REARM

London, Feb. 2 (CP)— French circles reported a communique has been drafted reaffirming Germany's right to arms equality within a system of general security, and will be issued at the conclusion of the Anglo-French Ministerial conference today. The British foreign office declined to comment.

Parliament Hill Hears

(By WILFRID EGGLESTON)

Perhaps you didn't know.. that J. S. Woodsworth as a boy used to take lessons on the melodeon..that the little prairie settlement of Brandon in the '80's used to see a boy being pulled all around town in winter on a sleigh to which was hitched a big dog, the boy being the future president of the C.C.F..... that he was sufficiently good at 'soccer' to win his place on the Wesley College "Eleven"..that in his final year he was elected "Senior Stick", an award given to the best all-round student of the year ..that he is descended on both sides of the House from United Empire Loyalist stock, one branch of the family entering via Pennsylvania to Ancaster Ontario, around 1800. the other from New York City to 'Muddy York' (now Toronto) after the war of 1812..that as a boy of 14 he rode with his superintendent missionary father in a 'buckboard' all over the present sites of Alberta and Saskatchewan..it was three years after the Saskatchewan Rebellion..that the very first resolution he ever drafted when he came to Ottawa early in 1922 urged the creation of a scheme of unemployment insurance..the clerk ruled it out of order, because it involved the expenditure of public money.

These, and other interesting facts, come from a 'Sketch' of the C.C.F. leader written by Miss Olive Ziegler, former dean of Alma College, St. Thomas. The book runs to 232 pages and sells for Two Dollars..Interesting to note that books about R. B. Bennett, J. S. Woodsworth and Mackenzie King have been issued all within a period of about six weeks ..The Woodsworth sketch was to have been published by one of the famous Toronto publishing houses, but they got 'cold feet' at the last minute regarding the treatment of the Winnipeg strike episode as biased..in favor of the strikers.. but Miss Ziegler went pluckily ahead and had it printed at her own expense..it's a competently written book about an interesting public figure..here's wishing her well with it.

At the end of the fourth radio address, the barber announced to a friend that he had decided after weighty consideration, to give the present Prime Minister his support at the forthcoming election.

Then, after the fifth address, he saw his friend again, and admitted he had changed his mind.

"Why?" asked his friend curiously, as the lather was applied for the daily shave.

"Bennett had no call to use such names on King", replied the barber.

"I didn't hear any names," spluttered his client, as well as he could.

"Oh yes," confidently replied the tonsorial artist. "He went after him several times."

"What did he call him?" persisted the friend.

"I couldn't quite catch it," admitted the barber, "but it sounded as though he was saying that Mackenzie King was a 'lazy fellow' or 'lazy for fair'!"

From my notebook..Hon. R. B. Hanson, new Minister of Trade and Commerce, has never touched a drop of liquor in his life..admits he finds it embarrassing at times when they hand around the cocktails, but he persists in being a total abstainer..one bill has been read at least 70 times, and it isn't law yet, and never will be.. it's the 'bill respecting oaths of office' which always gets first reading before the Commons takes up the King's Speech.. the custom goes back hundreds of years..it's to signify the independence of the Commons, going on with a bit of their own business before dealing with the Throne Speech..Senator Arthur Meighen has read almost as much mathematics as law..he taught mathematics for a while and the faculty for figures runs in the family..his boy who went through Royal Military College was about the best mathematician in the records of that institution..Woodsworth's oldest boy is again on the editorial staff of a Winnipeg paper..he has taken up flying also..Woodsworth hasn't been up with his son yet....

Hon. Martin Burrell, parliamentary librarian, and a veteran of the House in days past, tells a good yarn about the days when he used to run a little paper in British Columbia, which struggled, through the medium of a hand-press, into existence once a week in rivalry with a 'rag' which was published on the other side of the street. The former cabinet minister was editor, reporter printer's devil and I suppose on occasion he ran the hand-press.

A prominent citizen in town had been very ill. However, on doctors' orders, it was decided to move him to California in the hope that the change would benefit him. Mr. Burrell, expecting that by the time his paper got out 'on the street' the man would have left, wrote a paragraph to this effect:

"People will be glad to know that Mr. X has left for a warmer climate."

Unfortunately, just as the paper was being circulated, the poor man died!

There's a lot going on behind the scenes regarding wheat..momentous conferences about which nothing is being said publicly..some authorities are beginning to worry about the sluggish movement of our wheat abroad..afraid we'll lose our markets permanently.. renewed talk of a wheat board.. McFarland said to have become worried at last..The Liberals wondering what kind of a heritage they'll get if they come into power and discussing what they ought to do about it..the future of the prairie west is tied up pretty intimately in the government's wheat policy.

Rural Scholar and Chores City Pupil and Distractions

Little Johnny is up early and about the daily chore of assisting in the feeding of the cows and horses, collecting the eggs, splitting the day's firewood for the family stove and carrying in the brimming pails from the morning's milking. Mary has been helping clear the breakfast table, washing and drying the dishes and tidying up the house for mother. Both have done a fair portion of the morning's work before they finally grab their respective book bags and call out their cheery 'Goodbyes' as they head for school a mile or two away.

And therein, according to Mr. H. J. Clarke, B.A., of this city, School Inspector for South Hastings, lies the difference between the rural scholar and the urban. One cannot, in the opinion of the veteran inspector, single out any particular scholar of any rural section and point to him as being brighter or smarter than his city cousin. But, closer application to work and study on the part of the rural scholar gives him an edge over his urban classmate.

"Now and then that same old question of whether the rural or the city scholar is the brighter crops up," commented Mr. Clarke today at his office. "Neither one is smarter than the other; nearly all children are born with the same amount of brains; but the use they make of that gray matter may single them out in their respective classes."

"Country pupils do not have the distractions that the city pupils have and their customary mode of life on the farm encourages them to view their school life in a more serious manner. He is used to a fair amount of work and has been brought up to become used to it, so that he carries this same idea into the class room with him. He is liable to be more interested, to study harder and to make better marks. Of course this does not apply in every instance, but it is a good general rule. If the city pupil adopted this same attitude toward work and their studies—and I'm not saying that a great many do not—then you would have absolutely no difference between them."

Students Injured in Clash

Paris, Feb. 2 (AP)—Two foreign students were injured in a clash between French and foreign students as the result of the former's resentment against alleged excessive privileges granted to the outsiders. The French students attempted to prevent foreigners from attending classes. University officials were forced to close the medical school doors.

TAILORED SUITS MORE FEMININE

By RACHEL GAYMAN

Paris, Feb. 2 (CP-Havas)—The classic tailored suit has been subjected to radical changes by Paris courturiers and its new silhouette generally is redolent of feminine fashions during the first years of the Third Republic, formed after the Franco-Prussian War.

Jackets are short and straight. Although skirts will follow these lines, they will in many cases bear pleats or be graced with pockets whose only difference from those of last year is that they are shorter.

All these ensembles will be in one-colored cloths with black or marine blue woollens. Many of the suits will be set off by jaunty blouses embellished with real lace, which has come into style again.

Some skirts have given way to a small gown whose upper part is smartly embroidered and resembles a bolero. These tailored gowns are tight at the waist and will be worn with a short jacket devoid of collar or lapel, adorned with large pockets and a broad belt.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Bradshaw Are Honored at Point Anne

A very enjoyable evening was spent in the Orange Hall, Point Anne, when the friends and neighbors of Point Anne and the front of Thurlow assembled together to wish the bride and groom, Mr. and Mrs. Leaman Bradshaw, happiness and to present them with many useful gifts. The evening was spent playing cards and dancing. Just before the lunch hour the bride and groom were asked to take seats of honor which were very prettily decorated with white streamers of ribbon. The following address was read:

"Mr. and Mrs. Leaman Bradshaw:

"We your friends are assembled here for the purpose of bestowing upon you our best wishes and to ask you to accept these tokens of our esteem which we hope you will find useful as well as a remembrance of your many friends. You are both young Canadians starting out on life's journey together and we hope the path which you have chosen will lead you in bright sunshine always. We regret to lose you both and will miss your assistance and co-operation both in the church work and the social life of these communities; but we feel sure that what is our loss will be another's gain. As we are very proud of you, we join in wishing you a very bright and prosperous New Year and much happiness in the years to follow.

The bride and groom thanked their friends for the many useful gifts and invited all to visit them in their new home at Cobourg. "For they are jolly good fellows" was sung and dancing was resumed until the wee small hours.

QUIET WEDDING AT CARRYING PLACE

CARRYING PLACE—On Thursday, the last day of January, there was solemnised at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hicks, the wedding of Mrs. L. Atkinson of Toronto, to Mr. Marshall Young, with Mr. Fred Peer of Belleville officiating. Many good wishes for the future were showered on the happy couple after the ceremony.

Perhaps it was the weather, perhaps the postponement a few days before, had something to do with it, but the fact remains that the Hockey Club dance was only fairly attended when it was presented in the Parish Hall on Wednesday evening. An orchestra from Trenton gave splendid music for round and square dancing, and those who did brave the chilly winds felt amply repaid for coming.

Mr. Louis Germain is being kept busy with his caretaking duties at the Parish Hall. On Friday last there was a dance there. Another followed on Wednesday of this week.

A biting north wind that really bit brought a halt to ice harvesting operations on the bay on Wednesday. With the mercury sinking to the twenty below mark the night before, the morning was so frosty that little could be done, and the men decided to wait for slightly warmer weather. It was cold again on Wednesday evening and night, temperatures here being reported at about twelve degrees below zero. A report from the Second Concession tells of twenty below, while a story from Wooler gives us thirty-five below, which sounds plenty cool.

Neighborhood congratulations are offered to Mr. and Mrs. John Davis at the Murray Canal to whom the stork paid a visit early on Tuesday of this week.

The Ladies' Guild met on Wednesday at the home of Mrs. G. Clark for their regular bi-weekly meeting. At the meeting plans were made to carry on a little local relief work there having been one family reported as being in slight need.

Carrying Place hockeyists put another victory on their win column on Wednesday evening when they tangled in the first game of a doubleheader with the Co-Operative Workers and emerged victors after a rather scrambly display. Once again the first line of "Sunfish" Anderson, Norm Johnson and Vic Willie showed their skill, but there are not enough seasoned players remaining on the squad to give them enough rest. Of the locals Eddie Quackenbush and "Pat" Hicks and "Bucky" Herrington are perhaps the pick and are coming along nicely, but they have yet to match strides for many minutes with town talent, and the manager of the team is hoping to bolster his drooping second line before the next game. The next one, incidentally, is going to be a tough one to win for the locals, although resting in second place now, along with the T.H.S. team, go up against the fast Woolerites on Friday, the 8th. This will surely be a game with plenty of pep and speed. Johnson is one of the fastest men on skates seen in Trenton and possesses the additional asset of a strong and accurate shot. He is aided on the forward line by clever little Vic Willie and the perennial John Anderson who boasts, not without foundation, that he played his first game of O.H.A. hockey some twenty-eight years ago. John has a shot that makes most of them duck and it has not lost its speed to any noticeable extent. Local fans are hoping that the locals will be able to give the Wooler team a good argument.

Manager LaTour says that the team plans a trip to Wellington Arena on Wednesday evening next for an hour's practice and exhibition game against Consecon. The "Fishermen" have one of the strongest teams in the loop to the south of us, resting on top of the heap just now, and they ought to be able to provide an interesting time for local players.

LINKING OF FISCH AND VIOLET SHARPE SEEN

Saw Fisch on Ferry

Reilly walked over to the witness chair, carrying a picture of Isador Fisch, a skinny-faced man with his hair slicked straight back from his forehead.

"I show you this picture," Reilly said, "and ask you if you ever saw this man."

"Yes, on the ferryboat that night" the witness replied.

"Go on."

"The boat landed and the two men assisted a woman and a baby on a street car."

Reilly went back to the defence table and picked up another picture.

"I show you this picture and ask you if it was the woman you saw?"

"I think it was."

It was a picture of Violet Sharpe.

"The woman seemed very nervous," Sommers said. "She held the baby and was nervous."

"Did you see the baby?"

"Yes."

"Was it blonde or brunette?"

"It was blonde."

"How old was it?"

"About two years.

The Lindbergh baby was 21 months old when it was kidnapped and had curly, golden hair.

Piece by piece the defence was building up its contention that two men—neither of whom was Hauptmann—kidnapped the baby. Yesterday Lou Harding, a laborer swore he saw two men on a New Jersey road in an automobile that contained the ladder found on the Lindbergh estate after the kidnapping. These two men, he said, asked him to direct them to the Lindbergh home on the day of the kidnapping.

Then Wilentz got up for cross-examination and led Sommers into a maze of contradictions until at last the witness sat back sullenly in his chair and kept repeating:

"I won't say yes and I won't say no."

Who the third man in this story was, nobody knows. Wilentz attempted to trap the witness into identifying a picture of a convict, whose name was not revealed and that of the companion of Fisch and Miss Sharpe. Sommers peered at the photograph through his glasses and said:

"I won't say that is the man I saw and I won't say it isn't. You're trying to mix me up."

"Did you ever seen the short man again?"

"No."

Wilentz strolled around the court room asking trivial questions and then shot this one in:

"Did you ever see the two men on a street car or on a ferry again?"

"Yes."

Wilentz leaped at him:

"You just told me you never did see the short man again."

"I may have been mixed up a minute ago."

"Describe the woman you saw getting on the street car?"

"She was 5 feet, 6 or 7 inches, of medium build, with dark hair and a brown coat."

"You know that because you saw her on the street car?"

"Yes."

"A moment ago you told me you didn't see her after she got on the street car."

The witness brushed his hand across his mouth and did not answer.

"Where did the men meet the woman and the baby?"

Sommers evaded the question and Justice Thomas W. Trenchard ordered him to answer it.

"They met her beside the ferry house."

Wilentz then picked up the same picture of Violet Sharpe that Reilly had shown to the witness and asked:

"You never saw this woman's picture before, did you?"

"I might have," Sommers said cautiously.

"Didn't you say on direct examination that the woman you saw with the baby resembled this picture?"

"Yes."

"But now you wouldn't say definitely that this was the woman?"

"It might have been somebody else."

Pin Faith on Gang Theory

So now—one week after the state rested its case and the defence began calling witnesses—it becomes clear what line of strategy Hauptmann's lawyers will pursue.

They will try to prove that a gang kidnapped the baby and that Isidor Fisch was a member of the gang. That will explain how Fisch got the ransom money which he is supposed to have left with Hauptmann when he sailed off to Germany to die.

Hauptmann could not have committed the crime alone—as the indictment charges—because he was in Christian Fredericksen's bakery on the night of March 1, and there are four people who have sworn to it—Mrs. Hauptmann, Louis Kiss, August von Henke and Elbert Carlstrom.

Furthermore, Hauptmann did not write the 14 ransom notes, as eight state experts said he did, because J. M. Trendley of East St. Louis, Ill., a defence handwriting expert, testified that all the notes were written by a left-handed man who was trying to disguise his script. Hauptmann is right-handed.

A mysterious post card that appeared at the defence table yesterday indicates that Reilly may attempt to prove that Fisch made Hauptmann the innocent victim of the whole business. That he imitated Hauptmann's handwriting in the ransom notes and that, when he knew he was about to die, he saddled off on Hauptmann the material evidence of the crime— the $14,600 ransom .

Reilly showed this post card to Trendley yesterday. Then abruptly he dropped the matter, after announcing he would show later that the man who wrote this card had something to do with the ransom notes.

Fisch was under accusation today, in court and out of court. At noon Friday in the lobby of the Union Hotel across the street from the courthouse Reilly made this announcement:

"If we can get sufficient money and can halt the intimidation of our witnesses, due to threats, we will bring several people from various parts of the United States and Canada who will testify that Fisch not only got the ransom money but that he had a large part in the kidnapping."

Sommers' story was snapped in the middle, like a magazine serial by the adjournment of court until Monday morning. The attorney general is anxious to get him back under cross-examination.

"We are willing, you honor," he told the court, when Reilly urged that the session be prolonged until Sommers was excused from the stand, "to pay this witnesses' expenses if he will remain over until Monday."

"You talk to the witness about that," Justice Thomas W. Trenchard replied. "I think we had better recess now until Monday."

Trendley was the first of the defence handwriting experts. Three, possibly four, more will follow him. A lanky, elderly man who had been in the handwriting business for more than 40 years, he went over ransom notes, letter by letter, telling the jury he was convinced Hauptmann did not write them.

Trendley said all the experts called by the state had ignored significant discrepancies between Hauptmann's handwriting and that in the ransom notes. Reilly drew out from him the assertion that the state's experts had ignored nine of the 12 lines in the ransom note that Col. Charles A. Lindbergh found on his window sill when he ran upstairs and discovered his son was missing.

Before court convened Trendley told the United Press he had tried for two weeks to "forge" ransom notes and was unable to do it.

"I've never seen anything like the writing in those ransom notes," he said. "Hauptmann, certainly didn't write them."

The state dealt a hard blow to Hauptmann at the opening of Friday's session when it produced in court the records of Bellevue Hospital in New York.

Louis Kiss one of the witnesses who said he saw Hauptmann in Fredericksen's bakery on the night of the kidnapping testified that he remembered the date because he had taken his son to Bellevue to be treated for a kidney ailment exactly a week before. It was on Feb. 22, 1932—George Washington's birthday—he said, that the child was stricken. At 1 a.m. on the morning of Feb. 28, Kiss added, the boy was taken to the hospital.

Bellevue's records, the state showed indicated Kiss' son was admitted at 1 a.m. Feb. 22, 1932. Thus if he was in Fredericksen's bakery exactly a week, he was not there the night of the kidnapping at all, but instead, was there on the night of Feb. 29.

Reilly told the court Friday, he expected to rest the defence's case on Thursday. He will go to New York over the week-end he said, to interview witnesses.

SPLENDID DANCE BY HOCKEY CLUB

Stirling High School Sponsors, Successful Social Event

Stirling, Feb. 2.—The dance held in the community hall under the auspices of the Stirling high school hockey club on Thursday evening, Jan. 31, attracted an unusually large crowd of local dance lovers. Campbellford, Belleville, Trenton, Marmora and many other centres were well represented. Dancing began at 8.15 and continued until 1:30 a.m.

The guests were received by Mrs. Earl Luery, wife of Trustee Earl Luery; Mrs. Bastedo, wife of the chairman of the property committee of the local school board; and Mrs. Lawlor, wife of the principal of the high school. They were introduced on the dance floor by Miss Ruby Stapley.

The hall was nicely decorated and made much more home-like by the lighting being somewhat subdued. An alcove in one end of the room, furnished with comfortable chairs, a fire-place, etc., was very attractively adorned with daffodils and narcissus.

During the evening a dainty lunch was served by several young lady students. Music was provided by Jack Grant and his aces of Marmora.

A few motorists still sporting 1934 license plates received final warning from Constable Sam Eggleton that the time is now past for their use.

Two teams improved their standing in the Stirling Juvenile Hockey League as a result of their victories in the double header played in the Stirling arena on Thursday evening. Dainard's team scored a 5-0 victory over Rowland's team, while Butler's aggregation clinched second place in the league standing by defeating Long's team 4-1.

Line-up for the first game:

Line-up or the second game:

Present league standing—1, Dainard; 2, Butler; 3, Long; 4, Rowland.

The Stirling branch of the Legion, No. 228 B.E.S.L., held their regular meeting on Thursday, Jan. 31, with a good attendance present. Addresses were delivered by Comrade (Rev.) E. W. Rowland and Comrade Dr. G. F. Walt. At the close of the regular business of the meeting a lunch was served followed by a social period that was greatly enjoyed by all.

The many friends of Mrs. R. W. Meiklejohn will be glad to learn that she has recovered sufficiently from her serious operation of a few weeks ago to be removed from the hospital to her home here. She is progressing quite rapidly on the road to complete recovery. Mary Farrell, Reg. N., is in attendance.

DANGEROUS WORDS . . .

"I don't want to play"

HIS playmates and all the gay, sparkling out-of-doors call, "Come out, come out!" Yet—Billy prefers to stay in.

"I don't want to play," he says. To every mother these words are danger signals.

You wonder what is wrong. The answer may be one of many things. Perhaps your child is taking cold. Maybe his digestive system is out of order. But, most likely of all—the underlying cause of his listlessness is constipation.

Give a SPECIAL Laxative

At such times as these it is a wise precaution to give a laxative—not just any laxative, but one made especially for him. Give him the children's laxative—Castoria!

Castoria is safe—contains no harsh purgatives, no narcotics, is not habit-forming. It is gentle—will not disturb digestion nor cause griping pain. And it is thorough!

Ask your doctor about Castoria. He will assure you that Castoria contains only such ingredients as are suitable for a child's system.

Children like it

Modern mothers, who realize they shouldn't force bad-tasting medicine on a child who is already upset; rejoice to find that their children like the taste of Castoria—take it without a struggle!

Keep a bottle of Castoria always ready in your medicine chest. (The family size bottle is especially economical.) Give it—from babyhood to 11 years—whenever a child needs a laxative.

LADY WITH SIX TOES GIVES ONE AWAY TO WOMAN WHO NEEDS IT

PARIS, Feb. 2.—(UP)—A pretty French woman, residing in the colonies, came to Paris to undergo an operation for removal of an infected toe.

Saddened by the knowledge that her foot in sandals would be disfigured, she asked a plastic surgeon Dr. Frances Dubois, to graft on a toe.

He said yesterday a newspaper advertisement brought 900 offers of toes. He chose a woman with six toes glad to get rid of the extra one, and now everybody's happy.

There's One Thing About Evening Clothes . . .

They must have that immaculately fresh look. A spot here and there, a faintly soiled appearance to formal clothes are simply not overlooked by even your best friend. Guard against the faintest suspicion of neglect by having evening clothes cleansed here regularly.

Mr. Edward Montgomery called on friends at Mount Pleasant on Monday.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Linn, Mount Pleasant, Rawdon, on Wednesday, Jan. 30th, a daughter.

Mrs. George McGie of Wellman's was hurriedly called to Pembroke on Tuesday owing to the serious illness of her mother, Mrs. Thomas Lowe. Later a message came saying that Mrs. Lowe had passed away.

On Monday evening a few members of Mount Pleasant Y.P.S. journeyed to Stirling and put on a programme at St. Paul's league. Mount Pleasant orchestra composed of Misses Olive McConnell, piano, P. Andrews, Isobel Turner, Edna Thrasher guitars, and Mr. Ira David, banjo gave four selections. Rev. P. G. Joblin gave the address of the evening. Mrs. Charles Dunham of Wellman's is still with her mother Mrs. George Wallace at Campbellford as she is very ill.

Mrs. Percy MacMullen attended an executive meeting of Belleville Presbyterial in the parlors of Bridge St Church, Belleville, on Thursday. Mrs. C W. Haggerty of Cherry Valley presided in absence of the president Mrs. H. P. Anderson of Newburgh and plans were made for the coming Presbyterial in March to be held at Picton.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Morrison was the scene of a pretty wedding on Wednesday, Jan. 23rd. when Mabelle Elizabeth Bateman, daughter of Mrs. Morrison and the late Francis Bateman was united in marriage to Mr. Archie John Francis Rupert, son of Mr. and Mrs Charles Rupert of Havelock with Rev. P. G. Joblin, pastor of Rawdon circuit officiating.

The bride looked charming in a gown of rust crepe and was attended by Miss Edna Morrison. Miss Mildred Elliott played Lohengrins wedding march and the groomsman was Mr. James Kerr of Havelock.

A sumptuous dinner was served in the prettily decorated dining room and the happy couple were showered with confetti before they left on their honeymaan. Later they will reside at Havelock.

Messrs. Boulter MacMullen of Winnipeg and Elias MacMullen are holidaying with Mr. and Mrs C. Sharp, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas MacMullen and other relatives in Rawdon.

What Local Theatre Managers Have to Say About Current Offerings

AT THE CAPITOL

"Evensong"
Dramatic Story of an Opera Star's Life and Loves

When "Evensong," the romantic picture of an opera singer's career, opens at the Capitol Theatre on Monday next, it will present in its leading role that glamorous artist of stage and screen, the lovely, ash-blonde Evelyn Laye.

It seems quite fitting that Miss Laye, who has herself figured so conspicuously in operetta successes, should be chosen to carry the role of Irela, the operatic star who turned her back on love in order to follow the call of her career. Naturally the demands of this role call for a voice of extraordinary beauty —and of this Miss Laye is assuredly possessed, as admirers all over the country can attest, after hearing her in Noel Coward's stage production "Bitter Sweet", a few seasons ago.

A notable cast was assembled to support Miss Laye. Chief among them is the seasoned character actor, Fritz Kortner, who plays with authority and conviction the role of the prima donna's manager. This manager dominates the life of his song-bird, not only shielding her from every untoward influence but relentlessly barring every distraction which might interfere with her career as an artist. It is he who frustrates the lonely primadonna's one determined attempt to give herself to the man she loves.

"Evensong" is said to re-create on the screen with convincing realism a number of scenes showing some of the most noted rendezvous of Europe. Among these is the interior of the opera house at Monte Carlo, elaborately reproduced and shows a cosmopolitan audience, bedecked and bejeweled for an evening's homage to the world's favorite diva! A [illegible] tion of a palace on the Grand Canal at Venice, with gondolas constantly floating past, is another of the settings. It is here, for the first time, that the jealously guarded Irela escapes from her task-master and dares to listen to the caressing words of love, poured in her ears by an Arch-Duke who has followed her half around the globe.

Tensely Dramatic

Despite the fact that the picture is enriched with the rendition of one famous melody after another—for we hear Evelyn Laye's beautiful soprano voice in every reel of the film—the dominant dramatic note of the Knob-lock play is never lost. This is the conflict between a woman's devotion to the call of her career and her longing for love.

Added Attractions

A beautiful and tuneful Broadway Brevity in colour entitled, "Show Kids" and a Krazy Kat Kartoon, "Bowery Daze" will be shown preceding the feature attraction.

Shows at 2.30; 7.15; 9.10.

Last Times Tonight

"By Your Leave," hilarious marital comedy, starring Ralph Morgan and Genevieve Tobin, and "Shadows of Sing Sing" with Bruce Cabot and Mary Brian. Last complete show at 8.45.

Mr. and Mrs. Cyril MacMullen and Mr. Leon MacMullen of Sidney spent Wednesday with Mr. and and Mrs. E. MacMullen.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McKeown and Margaret moved this week to their new home at Springbrook.

Mrs. Will Hubble has been entertaining her sister this week.

Miss Marguerite White spent Wednesday evening with Miss Eileen MacMullen.

REDUCE TAXATION

Kitchener, Ont., Feb. 2 (CP) — City council early this morning struck the tax rate of 41.7 mills, a reduction of three tenths of a mill from 42 mills, 1934 rate.

The reduction was effected by cutting the reserve against uncollected taxes and by a reduction of $5,000 in the amount to be raised for direct relief. A larger amount of the relief expense will be funded in 1935. Only $30,000 was set in the estimates, as against $35,000 last year.

SECTIONMAN IS KILLED

Blind River, Ont., Feb. 2 (CP)—John Chobie, 50, suffered fatal injuries when struck by a Canadian Pacific Railway freight train a few miles west of Spragge.

Chobie, sectionman, was on a handcar yesterday with a foreman named Mousseau. They saw the freight and started to lift the car off the tracks, but in some unexplained manner Chobie was caught and struck.

He suffered back injuries and was rushed to the Red Cross Hospital at Blind River where he died two hours after he was admitted. An inquest will be held next week.

AT THE BELLE

"Kid Millions"
Lavish Song-and-Girl Show a Distinct Hit

Eddie Cantor in "Kid Millions", the wide-eyed comedian's new screen musical extravaganza for Samuel Goldwyn, began a three day run at the Belle Theatre today, with Ann Sothern, Ethel Merman, Block and Sully and this season's collection of Goldwyn's Girls aiding and abetting the star in his frantic frollickings along the Nile in search of buried treasure.

Of the sixty prize beauties who comprise this year's crop of Goldwyn Girls who prance in and out of the picture in the lavish song and dance ensembles staged by Seymour Felix, thirty-one had never before appeared in a film. Among these was a girl who had been studying to be a school teacher; the daughter of Cantor's dentist; the mother of a nine year old son, a dietician; and the possessor of the most sought-after-face for photographic modeling in New York.

Walter Donaldson and Gus Kahn, Burton Lane and Harold Adamson contributed the sing hits, which include, "Okay Toots", "When My Ship Comes in", "An Ear Full of Music" and "Your Head on My Shoulder", while Irving Berlin's "Mandy" is revived in an old fashioned way. Arthur Sheekman, Nat Perrin and Nunnally Johnson wrote the story and dialogue.

$200.00 Color Finale

As a magnificent gesture of confidence in screen lovers appreciation of novelty in screen entertainment, Samuel Goldwyn expended $200,000 on the production of a unique Technicolor fantasy ending for "Kid Millions", yet this sequence provides less than 600 feet, or slightly more than half of one reel, of the picture.

Nothing quite like this sequence has been filmed before. It may best be described as a "Silly Symphony", done with human beings and with exaggerated settings and properties instead of animated cartoons.

It is a Brooklyn urchin's wish come true—a fantasy of what a poor boy wants to do when he gets rich.

Among the amazing settings are a fantastic Ice Cream Factory, three huge "contented cows" which moo and nod and swish their tails while lovely Goldwyn Girls as milk maids sing and dance for them; a gigantic ice cream freezer on the top of which an ice skating ballet of thirty beautiful girls is staged; a free ice cream counter where 500 youngsters are served ice cream to the rhythm of a new Kahn and Donaldson song hit, and a row of truly colossal ice cream sodas, each of which is thirty feet high. The whole sequence is photographed in the new three-tone Technicolor process and a quality of color photography never before realized is achieved through the use of the new silent carbon lights in place of the incandescent lighting heretofore necessary because of the microphones. A funny All-Star comedy "Rural Romeos", and the Belle Latest News of the World, precede the exhibition of the feature attraction.

January Dividends' Total Again Shows Improvement

Canadian Corporations Disburse $15,602,840 as Compared to 14 Millions Same Month Last Year —All Branches of Industry Contribute

By CENTRAL PRESS CANADIAN

Toronto, Feb. 2—Dividend payments by Canadian corporations in January, estimated from official declaration by Bongard and Co., members of the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges, again showed the improvement noted in practically all the months of 1934, and in the closing months of 1933.

Payments to stockholders in the current month approximated $15,602,840, compared with $14,722,268 in January, 1934, and with $14,204,897 for similar month of 1933. This is an improvement of 5.5 per cent. over January, 1934 and 9.7 per cent. compared with January, 1933. The current total is the highest for any similar month since 1932, and reflects increased earnings enjoyed by Canadian corporations in the past year, or the first upturn in profits for the majority since 1929.

With most Canadian companies ending their fiscal period with the calendar year the list of corporations making dividend disbursements in January was unusually large, and total disbursements were paid on over 175 securities or more than for any one month since 1929. No better evidence, therefore is available of the improvement in general conditions in the Dominion and in corporate earnings.

All Branches Contribute

While all branches of Canadian industry contributed substantially to the increase for the month, mining companies played a prominent part in the higher total. This is attributable to the higher price received by the producers for gold, and to profitable operations of new producers whose earnings are now established on a basis warranting dividend disbursements to stockholders. In this group, Reno Gold paid its first dividend, and Wright Hargreaves a bonus of five cents.

A number of industrial corporations rewarded their stockholders with bonuses or extras, in addition to regular disbursements. Bruck Silk, Limited, paid an extra of five cents a share; Building Products, Limited, 25 cents; Canadian Canners 2½ cents on the convertible preferred issue, Canadian Foreign Investments 25 cents, and Intercolonial Coal $2 a share.

Payments on account of arrears of dividends on preferred issues were made by other corporations. Tip Top Tailors paid the one dividend in arrears on the senior security, while distributions on account of arrears were made by Canadian Wirebound Boxes, Investment Foundation, Monarch Knitting and Sherwin Williams.

Unfavorable dividend action was limited to a comparatively few corporations. Brewing Corporation of Canada, halved the payment on the preferred issue for the quarter from 75 cents to 37½ cents. United Bond and Share reduced its payment from 15 to 10 cents.

TEST TUBE BURSTS STUDENT BURNED

Harrison King of Toronto Experimenting at Time

Toronto, Feb. 2.—Harrison King, Jr., 18-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. H. King, of 54 Elmer Avenue, suffered painful burns to his face, eyes, neck and arms when a test tube full of acid exploded in his face in the laboratory of Malvern Collegiate, late yesterday afternoon. Harrison was experimenting with a formula, the ingredients of which were written on the blackboard and was holding the tube in his hand, when another student poured another acid into the tube and the mixture exploded.

According to Mr. and Mrs. King, Harrison and the other students were serving a detention and were using the time to catch up on their experiments. At the time of the accident, the supply teacher for the regular master, who was ill, was out of the room, and just what the acids were that the lads were using is not known.

C. H. Lehmann, principal of Malvern Collegiate, said that the door of the laboratory should have been locked and that the lads were in the room without proper supervision.

TRANSIENT DIES OF PULMONARY T.B.

John Ritary, aged 38, who was a resident for some time of Hungerford Township, died in the hospital here yesterday afternoon. Deceased was committed to jail on Dec. 11 for three months on a charge of vagrancy. He was ill and was taken to the hospital same day. Pulmonary tuberculosis was the cause of death. An inquest was held this Saturday, morning at Tickell and Browne's undertaking establishment. The jury returned a verdict that death resulted from natural causes. Mr. George Dulmage was foreman of the jury. Dr. Wallbridge, coroner, presided.

Chief of Police J. C. Hayes of Tweed village testified that John Ritary was a laborer and for some time had been living in Hungerford township and Tweed but had no permanent abode. For ten nights previous to being arrested as a vagrant he had been sheltered at the village lock-up. When he appeared here on Dec. 11 before Magistrate Butler he asked to be sent up for three months and his request was granted. The same day he was taken to the hospital owing to his condition.

Storage Butter Stocks Gain Over Feb., 1934

Toronto, Feb. 2 — Local produce prices, apart from a few changes in poultry, were unchanged yesterday, with eggs, butter and churning cream at their high levels of the week. Buying price on turkeys rose to 18 cents for dressed "A" grade, while quotations were issued on chickens over six pounds. Previously, top weights ranged from 5½ to 6 pounds.

Storage figures for Feb. 1, issued during the day, showed butter stocks at Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg considerably in excess of the figures for a year ago. As was expected, periodic spells of mild weather gave egg stocks a boost over a year ago by curtailing consumption and increasing production. Storages figures follow:

ALLEGED PLOTTERS HAILED BEFORE LONG

Claims Prominent Citizens Plan to "Rub Him Out"

Baton Rouge La., Feb. 2.—(AP)—Foemen, accused by Huey Long of planning his assassination, were hailed today before him and his cours inquiry into the "plot". Bayonets ruled the capital as the Dictator-Senator—"Lawyer Long" for the moment—quizzed witnesses in an attempt to show prominent officials and citizens sought to "rub him out".

Ernest J. Bourgeois, president of the Square Deal Association leading organized opposition to Long, charged Toby Leblanc, one of the Senator's witnesses, gave testimony, which was "carefully coached and utterly untrue" in an attempt to put Bourgeois "on the spot with the square deal".

The statement said the witness had a "glib, loose and lying tongue". Leblanc had called Bourgeois "yellow", in testimony, said he believed the Square Dealer shot George Alessi lone casualty of last Saturday's airport conflict, and added he started to shoot Bourgeois when the latter fled the field in the face of an attack by the National Guard.

Long named a district attorney, four sheriffs and others as leaders in the "plot" to assassinate him.

DAMAGE BY FIRE REACHES $10,000

Owen Sound Block Falls Prey to Early Morning Blaze

Owen Sound, Ont., Feb. 2 (CP) — More than $10,000 damage was done here early today in a blaze which destroyed the entire business block on Tenth Street east. The fire, origin of which has not yet been determined, started in the wooden building occupied by the Northern Transport Company and spread east and west, involving in its destruction the Goetz butcher shop, Ferris fruit stand, Byes barber shop and the Transport Company's store room and garage.

James Turnbull of Toronto, driver for the Transport Company, had just gone into the office and fallen asleep when he was awakened by the heat and barely managed to make his escape through the sliding doors which were already aflame. The fire department answered his call within a minute. In the meantime the Ferris family were awakened and managed to make their escape without injury.

SPECIALISTS SEEN AS TOO PLENTIFUL

Dr. Fishbein Speaks at Annual Banquet at McGill

Montreal, Feb. 2.—Specialization in medicine has increased to such an extent that while approximately 10 per cent of those practicing in 1900 considered themselves specialists, today about 40 per cent of doctors classify themselves as specialists in one thing or another, it was pointed out by Dr. Morris Fishbein, of Chicago, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association, in an address last night at the annual banquet of the McGill Medical Undergraduates' Society in the Windsor Hotel. Many of the faculty were present to give the visiting speaker an enthusiastic reception.

Dr. Fishbein looked upon the advance of medicine as not an unmixed blessing. In some respects, he said medicine could be considered an important cause of the world's economic difficulties, for by increasing tremendously average life expectancy it had added to the evils of unemployment and increased the burden of old age maintenance.

Fear Banished

On the other hand, the advance of medicine had certainly banished a great deal of fear from people's minds. There was for instance little fear of ravaging epidemics. Pain too, had largely been controlled.

The visitor warned his hearers of the perils of socialization of medicine. Further specialization and mechanization of medicine would lead, he believed, to the control of medicine by the state, a thing which he considered would neither be in the best interests of the profession nor contributory to the advancement of medicine.

He drew humorous word pictures of the tremendous strides of medicine since 1890 towards so-called efficiency, citing an example of how a baby was welcomed into the world today after months of preparation and with all the facilities of a great hospital.

Inefficient Work

He also described the multitude of tests that a woman was put after three weeks' stay that she through in a hospital to be told was suffering from no more than the advancement of age. Any good practitioner could have told her to "eat less and rest more and it would have cost her a great deal less."

Dr. Fishbein pointed out some of the effects of people's desires to be cured of real or imaginary ills. He stated that four times as much was spent on quacks and cultists as on the legitimate practice of medicine.

He cited, too, the tremendous growth in numbers of nurses. Whereas in 1890 the number of doctors graduating were more than the number of nurses leaving training schools each year, the proportion in 1932 had changed to 4,500 doctors and 22,500 nurses.

GUARD CHILDREN WITH REVOLVERS

Pirates Threatened Death if Planes Dropped Bombs

HONGKONG, Feb. 2.—(AP)—Pirates, who plundered the steamer Tungchow threatened to massacre the seventy-five mission school children aboard if the British plane, which roared overhead attempted a bombing those aboard the ship said today.

The marauders held the children and their elders in a state of terror for three days before the plane from the British aircraft carrier Hermes frightened them away yesterday.

Police broadcast a warning another gang of pirates was proceeding toward Canton with the object of attacking a ship running for Shanghai.

During the three days all aboard were constantly-watched by pirates with drawn revolvers. The children behaved well although horrified.

The pirates had great difficulty in obtaining junks to transfer the booty ashore. They approached several which veered off. The pirates fired at one junk with rifles but the junk replied with a small cannon. Finally a large junk came alongside and the two chiefs of the band boarded it.

While the loot was being transshipped the plane from the Hermes appeared overhead and the junk pulled away. The remaining pirates were thrown into a panic and threatened to kill the children if the plane dropped bombs. The marauders later escaped in the ship's small boat.

Woman Gives Tailor Race For Needle-Threading Crown

Ottawa, Feb. 2 (CP)—The Capital today crowned a new international needle-threading champion after a stirring contest between a New Hampshire housewife and an Ottawa tailor, the tailor won 250-224.

The contest started when Mrs. Jeanne Cloutier of Suncook, N. H., read that Tailor J. Serrelli could thread numerous strands through the eye of a needle. Mrs. Cloutier sent him a standard darning needle, the eye jammed with 224 strands of white cotton thread. Serrelli returned it with 26 strands added. He used black thread, distinguishing his work from that of his adversary.

Minus 3 Regulars 'Combines' Defeated by Cobourg Waverleys But Still in Playoff Position

Score 10-8 But Missed Enough Goals to Win by Plenty

DEFENCE WEAK

Jeffrey, Ethier And Green Unable to Make Trip

Minus the services of three regular players the Belleville 'Combines' dropped their regular scheduled "big six" intermediate O.H.A. game to Cobourg when the homesters took the local lads into camp by the score of 10 to 8 in a free-scoring affair that saw the Belleville crew repeatedly weak while in a scoring position last night. In place of goalie Jeffery, Joe Gould returned to the nets, while Tommy Green and Jimmie Ethier, local defencemen, were absent, the former being ill in bed. Freddie McGuire of the local juniors was pressed into service as Alex Weir teamed on the defence with York.

After having the majority of the play during the initial period the Belleville aggregation found themselves outscored 2-1 as the second period opened when the homesters again outscored the visitors by a 3-2 lead by a 7 to 4 score. In the last stanza the Thomas-Sagar combination found the local side scored the Waverleys 4-3, but lost the night's decision 10-8. The defeat did not materially enter into the league standings as the locals remain second place, a tie with Campbellford, who administered a 5-3 walloping to the visiting Peterboro club last night.

The local scoring honors were divided between Alex Weir, Carl Morgan and Doug Powers, all clicking for two goals each with Roy Covert and Fred McGuire getting one each. The local attacking line of Covert-Powers-Morgan was the best unit in Manager Thomas' lineup, but Waverley's into battle and stood off at the night's star with the combined speed-play and general shiftiness. Campbell and Gerrard shared the scoring honors for the Waverleys while Pratt turned in a masterful game in the Cobourg nets and was given superb protection by his defence. Gibson and Pearse looked the best of the alternates. The "Combines" opened purely on the offensive and repeatedly bombarded Pratt throughout the entire first period, only to give their poorest exhibition of the season while inside their opponents' blue line, their shooting being exceptionally poor as they repeatedly golden chances of pocketing to aspire themselves of sufficient goals to win. Again in the last period the locals carried the play but the final song found them two goals shy of their rivals.

TIGERS LOOK FOR VICTIMS

Lead O.H.A. Senior Race And No Competition in Sight

(By The Canadian Press)

Hamilton's growling Tigers set back on their haunches today, waiting for some senior team to pop up in the Ontario Hockey Association and force them to extend their strength to hang onto the leadership.

Their nearest opponents, Toronto All-Stars, failed to chop into the lengthy lead last night and the Tigers kept up on a victory at Toronto, before 12,700 fans, the largest crowd to view a hockey game in Canada this year. Battling stubbornly Toronto was unable to match the speed and smoothness of the pace-setters. Tigers ran in three counters in the opening session, added another trio in the final stanza. Toronto batted in one in the first and two in each of the last periods.

George Parsons was the only worry to the Hamilton lineup. His stubborn offensive being rewarded with three goals. Parrant and Grant pounded in Toronto other counters. Maxie Bennett and Toe Blake located their scoring averages each notching two counters for Tigers. Lacombe also collected a pair and Radke and Howard each single.

Meanwhile at Hamilton, Oakville made an advance in the standing, stayed off a last period blast by Port Colborne to win, 5-4. Five major penalties were meted out during the fierce encounter.

Upper finally being banished the final twenty minutes of play for talking back to Referee Mitchell. Oakville was holding a 5-3 lead going into the third period when Port Colborne started their onslaught. Hestmer, Morrison and Dunn slapped in goals, but Ports were unable to get the tying goal. Upper scored the first midway in the first period. Township sharpshooting brought Oakville three counters while Matheson and Rae picked off the others.

MADOC KEGERS SLATE CLEAN

Defeat Grills' Garage 5-4 in Central Loop Fixture

Madoc, Feb. 2 (Special)—Madoc Intermediates kept their slate clean by defeating Grills' Garage by the score of 5-4 at the Madoc Arena on Wednesday night. Madoc easily had the best of the play and two of Belleville's goals were of doubtful variety. The Madoc team were: Defence of their regulars, Wallbridge, Whytock, West, Noble and Alexander all being out.

Goaling out of retirement, Buck Hulin tended goal and turned in a very capable performance. Tony Meraw, borrowed from Tweed, also played a good game and worked nicely with Henderson and Akey.

Howie and Ethier turned in good games for the "garage men" while only the great work of Bushey kept the Madoc team from piling up a score.

1st Period

The game opened fairly fast but the cold weather soon slowed the players down. Henn was penalized for tripping Bushey, Henderson and Akey both missed many scoring chances. Ethier missed many shots on goal. About two minutes before the period ended Henderson scored on a rebound.

2nd Period

Shortly after the period began Akey put the homesters two up when he scored in Meraw's rebound. Ashley was penalized for charging Mattin. Ethier put the Grills' line up a bit. Some loose work around the Madoc nets accounted for Belleville's first tally. About a minute later Howie scored for Grills. Howie's shot appeared to strike Henderson. Akey scored his third goal of the game on a pass from Henderson and Meraw. Ethier each tallied for Belleville, Embury was penalized. The period ended four all.

3rd Period

About halfway through this period Henderson slapped in the winner after some work he beat Buskard on the rebound of Ashley's shot. Henn scored on a pass from Ethier. Belleville tried hard but good work by the Madoc defence and Buck Hulin kept them from scoring.

The score:

Madoc.

1. Madoc—Henderson.

Penalties—Belleville—Henn. 2nd Period.

2. Madoc—Akey (Meraw)—.
3. Grills—Howie.
4. Belleville—H. Canning.
5. Belleville—Ethier.

(Day By Day)

The local intermediates lost a golden opportunity to advance into first position in the "big six" loop last evening at Cobourg when the Waverleys downed the "Combines" to the tune of 10 to 8 in a free-scoring game that packed a first major win of the season. While all three teams are in the Campbellford Maroons gave the Belleville intermediates a 3-2 going over up at the Hyrtle town and with the group race one hodge podge scramble for first position, as the teams turn into the home stretch. The standing now reads Peterboro one; while Belleville and Campbellford have suffered two reverses each, had the locals managed to eke out a victory last night, they would have been perched on the top rung of the group standing along with the Petes with two games left to play, both versus Eddie Wright's Petes.

With the score standing 2 to 1 early in the last period the Thomas-led aggregation, who were short-handed, made a determined effort and scored four goals—but the Waverleys slipped in two counters to win. The "Combines" were minus the services of Murray Green, Jack Jeffery and Derby Jeffery. Green is confined to his home following an illness, but did not accompany the locals while Jeffery could not get away owing to business. Joe Gould being pressed into service. Naturally the loss of Green and Jeffery were keenly felt by the locals, leaving them short-handed and so woefully weak on the defence. Of course the locals can still finish above the greys by taking the Petes into camp. The series has been arranged with the first game being played in the Liffleck City on Monday night and the second game being played in the local arena on Wednesday evening of next week. "What a series that will be, fans."

Getting back to last night's game the "Combines" missed enough scoring chances in the initial period to win a half dozen ordinary games despite the fact that the Waverleys were leading 2-1 at the end of the session. The locals had carried the play throughout, looked far the better team and scored on the rewards another sure victory. In third hectic first period the locals were on Platt so many times that he thought it was raining and they either missed the open net or hit the goalie. Oh well, the Peterboro-Belleville series may produce surprises, so we'll let dead dogs lie.

Local City League hockey officials have decided it advisable to bring the Alemites and Walker Grill's "Mechanics" together in committee room to decide which team shall be awarded first place in the standing. As the two standing now reads each team has won an equal number of games but have never clashed although the Grills' squad has played the same game to Trenton. The situation will be completely cleared up at the meeting being held tonight when President Rollins intends to settle the affair. The winner taking first place and the loser second. The latter leaves Trenton in third and S.E.A.C. sailing up in the rear enjoying the best ride of all berth, fourth place. It has not been decided when the City League play-off will start but in other week's lay-off is deemed advisable although it looks as though the city leaguers will run into more difficulties in delay the O.H.A. senior play-offs being scheduled to start next week.

Some time ago it was suggested that four teams be participated in the City League play-offs would be allowed to draft or draw players from the players' pool or the remaining three clubs left behind at the close of the regular schedule. This proposition was met most unfavorably by some of the clubs while others supported it. Some did not think that such a move was quite fair to those who had played during the winning clubs in subordinate positions, such as second string forwards who had stuck with their clubs through the entire season, if the stars of the clubs out of the playoffs could be added to the roster of the Queen's four which would naturally it would mean the releasing of guys who had stuck through thick and thin. Subsequently cooler heads planned over the matter and according to street stories, the suggestion of bolstering the teams for the play-offs was cast in the rubbish with the exception of one club, the S.E.A.C., who are to be allowed four or two star players in order to bring their roster up to six, so as per with the other group leaders. Incidentally there is more than the question of the rules being taken in the City League play-offs and the manner they get under way is more successful they should be, that is if the boys are ready to decide that it is a better policy to wait until after all O.H.A. play-offs are finished.

Perhaps the smallest player who ever performed in professional hockey was Frankie "Flying" McDougall. He played centre for Toronto Varsity in the old Canadian professional League several years. McDougall weighed 115 pounds.

CAGERS SPLIT DOUBLE BILL AT KINGSTON

Deacons Take Queen's Juniors 24-11 in Fast Tilt

"Y" TEAM BEATEN

Belleville basketball teams split a double bill in R.O.B.A. at Kingston last night when the Deacon A.C. juniors continued their triumphant march towards a second title, downing the Queens kids 24 to 11. In the senior game the Belleville "Y" intermediates were taking their second defeat of the season, 36 to 26. The juniors have not been defeated as yet in five starts. The intermediates were playing Queen's intermediates.

Playing a perfect defensive game the Deacons, realizing that the Queen's floor was much larger than their own, forced the Queens team to carry the play throughout and then taking advantage of scoring opportunities. Leading 12 to 7 at the halftime the locals added 12 more points in the last half, while the tri-color were held to two baskets. Henry, Cole and Martin led the Deacons while Wallbridge for the locals team played excellent defensive ball.

The line-up:

Queens (11)—McMahon 3, Lewis 6, Josephson 1, Vessie, Nicol, Whyte, then becomes a matter of drilling the team spirit into them," he expounded.

"You saw Chicago Blackhawks play last year, you know they won the Stanley Cup and you also know they were not so highly by some people. Well that was a lot of hard work and they got some good. They were a fine team and if they did have any shortcomings the fine spirit of the team as a whole overcame that."

Therefore of course, and most critics will agree, that purchasing Lionel Conacher first, the season started and then adding one or two other players to fit in, with him and the rest of the team played a large part in the ultimate success of the outfit.

"But even if I had got together a group of All-Stars, the team would have landed nowhere without club harmony and that is what the Maroons have and that is the team won't be anyone's door mat when the playoffs arrive."

RANGERS MEET AN ACID TEST

By The Canadian Press

The acid test for New York Rangers, the team that has hung up the best record in the major leagues in a comeback that has amazed the National Hockey League, comes tonight.

Lester Patrick, Frank Boucher, Bill Cook and the rest of the lads who topped their performance with two wins over Toronto Maple Leafs last week with Detroit Red Wings in New York and if they can hurdle Chicago Black Hawks will have that barrier the path to the Stanley Cup.

Displaced from third place in the American division by Ranger victories, Chicago Wings have been undergoing a shaking up process that Adams hopes will bring back their old fire. Whether it has will probably come out in the immortals of the New Yorkers. Little of it was noticeable when Chicago was trounced 4-1 Thursday.

Whatever the result Patrick's team cannot be thrust out of the last playoff spot. They hold third place with three points over Wings now. If Boston should defeat Montreal Canadiens tonight and Americans take Black Hawks in Chicago Sunday, Rangers, Boston, Chicago and the New Yorkers would be lined up in a deadlock for third places with only two points between Boston and Rangers.

Nothing like that interesting possibility can come out of the other two games on the week-end card. The result of the Americans-Toronto battle tonight and the game Canadiens and Eagles play in St. Louis Sunday cannot change the standings. The Canadiens-Eagle affair was scheduled for tonight, but was moved back a day at Eagles' request.

Y Team Beaten

After carrying the bulk of the play and holding the fast Queens intermediate to a 13 all draw at the half-way mark, the locals faded in the last half to drop a 36 to 26 decision. Personal fouls by the local defense players, While and Wicker, man, marred the chances of Belleville to such an extent that While was ruled out of the game with four fouls called against him. While had been a lever of strength during the first half, notching three baskets.

Burley, Scott and White showed up well for Belleville but the larger playing surface took its toll in the second half when the team tired. Scott, While and Burley all scored six points while Wickerson got 3 and Faulkner 5. Macarthur stood out as the star of the night and scored 15 of Queen's points. Gordon bagged 9, Thomson 5 and Stevens 4. Referee considering of the home team proved the deciding factor. The game was very keenly contested.

Queens (36)— Thomson 5, Simmons 2, Gordon 9, Gertaman, Faulkner, Stevens 4, Macarthur, Retzel, Crawford 1.

Referee—Johnnie Edwards Kingston.

Local Girls Win

In an exhibition game played in conjunction with the R.O.B.A. games the O.C.I. Grads stepped on the Queen's floor and downed the senior girls of that institution by the score of 21 to 17. Supported by one alternate the girls all ex-students of Belleville Collegiate, played a stellar game and always looked the best. The score was 12 to 8 for the visitors at the half, both teams scoring the same number of points in the last half.

Esther Moncrieff and Ana Garvey scored all the Belleville points; Miss Gartley getting 13. R. Fisher with 12 points led the Queen's girls. Miss Reddy counted 3 and G. Rose 2.

Belleville—E. Moncrieff, A. Garvey, M. Maclaren, D. Smith, M. Hutson, M. Juby and F. Tufts.

Queens—R. Fisher, K. Boddy, G. Rose, K. Wayling, L. Howie, D. Heinz, K. Kimmins, E. Richards and C. Arnell.

Team Harmony and Players For Positions Key to Success

(By George MacGuire)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Feb. 2.—(CP)—Key to success in the realm of professional hockey lies not so much in game-to-game plotting as in mapping out a pre-campaign strategy during the blistering summer months, according to Thomas Fitzpatrick Gorman, former extraordinary of Montreal Maroons.

Discussing the various angles of coaching in the National Hockey League and other circuits governed by the ice sport, while his proteges breezed through to a handy victory over the Boston Bruins Thursday night, Mr. Gorman emphasized the importance of getting the proper material, if possible, well ahead of the opening of the campaign.

"Once you have the players you want, that is the men you believe will best fit into the machine you are planning, your biggest problem then becomes a matter of drilling

OF FAMOUS FIGHTS AND FIGHTERS

BY BILL BRAUCHER

"Bonbler Bill" Squires was hailed as a marvel of the ring when he landed in America from Australia in 1907. He had scored an impressive string of knockout victories in Australia and New Zealand.

Tommy Burns, a Canadian whose real name was Noah Brusso, was then heavyweight champion of the world, though he scaled as a middleweight and occasionally as a light-heavy. When James J. Jeffries retired in 1905, he had bestowed the title upon Marvin Hart, following Hart's knockout of Jack Root. Burns beat Hart in 20 rounds in 1906 and claimed the title.

The Canadian seemed to clinch his claim by beating Pack O'Brien in 20 rounds in 1907. But there was the Australian champion, "Bonbler Bill", who also was regarded broadly as British champion, and Burns' claims were disputed by Squires' adherents.

Finally Burns and Squires were matched at Colma, Calif., July 4, 1907, with the retired champion, Jeffries, acting as referee.

Squires looked wonderful in training, and the chances of Burns, a much smaller man, were not fancied by bettors.

The battle was brief. In a few words, it was a three-punch fight. As they came together in the center of the ring for the first round, Burns connected, crossed with his right to Squires' jaw, and the Australian fell flat on his shoulder blades.

Jeff counted to nine before Squires scrambled to his feet. As the latter pushed in for the kill, Squires swung blindly and caught him on the chin, sending the little Canadian reeling backward. But Burns came back, set himself and planted another right and the fight was ended. Ten minutes passed before "Bonbler Bill" knew what happened him. Little Tommy was declared undisputed heavyweight champion of the world.

Squires claimed the knockout was a fluke and insisted he wasn't beaten by flying the Australian among the sweet peas twice later, once in Paris in eight rounds, later at Sydney in the fourteenth.

King George to Create Five New Kings As Part of Silver Jubilee Ceremonies

By Central Press Canadian

London, Feb. 2—During the celebrations of the silver jubilee of King George, five new kings will be created within the British Empire.

At the Imperial Durbar to be held in Delhi, the King-Emperor will confer the rank of kingship to five of the richest men in the world, the five most important ruling Princes in India. They are:

The Nizam of Hyderabad.
The Gaekwar of Baroda.
The Maharajah of Mysore.
The Maharajah of Kashmir.
The Maharajah of Gwalior.

Already there is one king in India, the King of Nepal. Only recently Col. Frederick Bailey presented his credentials as first British minister to the court of the first King of Nepal.

The new kings will have the right to exchange diplomatic envoys with the British court.

Fabulously Wealthy

The six new kings, representing almost fabulous wealth and considerable power over millions of people of India, are shown in the accompanying layout.

Of them, the Sunday Express of London says:

"The Gaekwar of Baroda is the shepherd boy who became a king. Sixty-five years ago the then Gaekwar was deposed and the present ruler, a twelve-year-old shepherd boy of distantly royal descent was found and officially adopted. His state brings him an annual revenue of £2,000,000.

"The Maharajah of Mysore is the fifty-year-old ruler of India's "model state" rich in coal, gold, coffee and timber.

"The Nizam of Hyderabad is the premier prince of India, wealthiest man in the world, and ruler of territory as large as Italy, with 14,000,000 subjects. His personal fortune is estimated at £100,000,000.

"The Maharajah of Kashmir rules one of the most beautiful countries in the world, bordering Russian, Chinese and Afghanistan territory in the extreme north of India, and therefore of great strategic importance. As Sir Hari Singh he was "Mr. A." of the notorious Robinson case in 1924. He is thirty-nine.

Intrepid Canadian Airman Rescues Crew Marooned in Ice of Arctic

By Central Press Canadian

Edmonton, Feb. 2—"We're sure glad to get out" were the first words spoken by Captain C. H. Roberts, Chief Engineer W. Weidemann and Cook L. A. Larocque of the Hudson's Bay Company freighter, Margot A., when they stepped out of Pilot Stanley MacMillan's big Fokker aeroplane of Mackenzie Air Services at the Edmonton airport after an epic dash from their ship, frozen into the Arctic seas at Lettie Bay, 350 miles north of Great Bear Lake, since Sept. 5, 1934.

"The first thing I'm going to do is have a bath," grinned Engineer Weidemann. "I haven't had one for seven months; just swill down with seal oil."

It was the first time that any northland pilot had ventured the dangerous flight into Lettie Bay to rescue Roberts, a Vancouver man, who was forced to run the Margot A. into Lettie Bay on September 5 to escape the ravages of a savage northland gale that smashed up another freighter, the Hazel Irma, which the crew managed to escape when the boat was pounded to pieces on the Arctic coast.

Ice formed quickly and before the captain of the Diesel-motored Margot could get under way, the 90-foot boat was frozen in. Three other ships further east along the coast, met the same fate.

Population of 3 Whites

A situation which in another decade might have looked hopeless was an easy matter for Captain Roberts to get around. He and the crew of five moved into the Hudson's Bay post at Lettie Bay, which is the home of three other white men, two Roman Catholic missionaries and the post manager.

The addition of six more mouths to the white man's tables at the post might have had its difficulties had not food been dog-teamed in to them. The marooned seamen communicated by short-wave with the radio stations at Coppermine and Aklavik, and arrangements were made to rush them out to civilization by air. They hoped to celebrate Christmas in Vancouver, but day after day passed without the 44-below zero three-hour Arctic daylight being shattered by the drone of an aeroplane.

The men settled down for a long wait, spending the long winter evenings around the bridge table and radio. Daylight hours of which there were never more than three and one-half, saw them making short dog trips into the bleak country surrounding the post. Not being reinforced in the North West Territories the necessary four years they were not permitted to hunt.

"We played a lot of bridge," explained Captain Roberts when telling of his enforced imprisonment in the Arctic, "and we spent many hours around the radio."

Terrific Gales

Arctic gales such as the one that drove their little boat into the safety of Lettie Bay, are like nothing else on earth, according to Captain Roberts.

"You'd have to be up there on open salt water, with the wind tearing in a smashing velocity and the mercury standing at 44 below zero to understand what I mean," he said.

"But don't misunderstand me", continued the captain. "It's a wonderful country and I intend going back again when the spring breaking comes. We had a Christmas that was different from any I have experienced before. Our guests for dinner were 22 "huskies" Eskimos I mean."

When Pilot Stan MacMillan took on the assignment of being the first airman to land an aeroplane at Lettie Bay, he was forced to lay over at Cameron Bay for five days, waiting good flying conditions. He communicated with the marooned men through short-wave radio via Coppermine and Aklavik. It was a 350-mile dash into the unknown for him, 700 miles the round trip, and he had just three hours and thirty minutes to make it in.

Dangerous Flight

"I waited until I considered weather conditions were perfect," said the pilot as the crowd at the airport gathered around with their praise and congratulations for his feat.

"The credit is all coming to the pilot and his mechanic Hedgins," was the opinion of the rescued seamen. "Had he missed Lettie Bay, there would have been little chance for him. It's sure flying when he hit Lettie Bay a small point on the map of a vast wilderness."

Each Hollywood Picture Star Has An Able 'Shock-Trooper' These Days

By RADIE HARRIS
Central Press Canadian Writer

Hollywood, Jan. 26— Between every delicate little motion picture star and the cruel world at large there is a shock-trooper, a one-man buffer, who takes the rap, wraps the takes and knows the answers to every question and every problem that may arise—that is, every problem that involves his client.

Sometimes they are secretaries; sometimes lawyers; sometimes cousins, uncles or brothers; sometimes just friends on the payroll. Hollywood dignifies them all by the title, "personal manager."

They catch tears, bouquets and abuse with equal dexterity and fortitude. Many of them should be credited with the success of their charges, for many a Hollywood gem has risen and become brilliant, only through the lifting and polishing efforts of someone whose penetrating vision could see a diamond or ruby in the rough ..... very rough, indeed, at times!

Behind The Scenes

To Harry Edington ("Mr. Barbara Kent" in his private life) goes a huge laurel wreath for his clever engineering of Greta Garbo's career. It was this former motion picture producer who planned the brilliant campaign of "Garbo, the Mystery Woman". It proved good business as well as good theatre.

It is no state secret that ever since Joseph von Sternberg first directed Marlene Dietrich in "The Blue Angel" he has been the Svengali influence in her career.

Perhaps one of the most intriguing artiste-manager associations is the one between Mae West and James O. Timony, who has guided her business destiny for 14 years.

While Bing Crosby is crooning to the tune of several thousand sheaxis a week, his elder brother, Everett, is in the counting-house, saving money.

Claudette Colbert knows that she can put all her trust in her agent, Charles Feldman, and her lawyer, Edwin Falk, both of whom act in an advisory capacity to her.

Gary Cooper's manager is Jack Mors, otherwise known as "the Colonel," a corpulent, quiet, businesswise and sometimes profane shock absorber, who can say "no" with a more positive finality than many men can achieve.

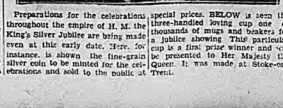
"Mr. Cooper would like to own this 18-cylinder super-special racing model town car," a hopeful salesman will suggest.

"The hell you say," Mors will growl back. "Try and sell it to me first!"

Challenge Few Accept

It's a challenge that few salesmen, even the thick-skinned ones, choose to accept.

Joan Crawford never makes an important move without consulting her mentor, Michael Levee, who also handles the business affairs of Douglas Fairbanks Jr., Bette Davis, Leslie Howard, Paul Muni and Warren William.



To be a Hollywood screen star is a complicated business that is becoming more complicated all the time ..... but to be a Hollywood "ease-balmer" entitles one to a place in the diplomatic courts of the world!

ALL-RUSSIAN CONGRESS OPENS

One of the most titled men in the Soviet is Mikhail Ivanovich Kalinin, chairman of the central executive committee of the U.S.S.R., and also of the central executive committee of the Russian Socialist Federated Soviet republic who is shown opening the 15th all-Russian Congress of Soviets. The congress is held in the White Hall of the great palace in the Kremlin. On the presiding dais are Kalinin V. M. Molotov and I. V. Stalin. Note the huge Lenin statue in background. This is one of the few pictures showing the "inner sanctum" which controls the Soviet. Chief topic under discussion is the possibility of war with Japan.

Preparations for the celebrations throughout the empire of H. M. the King's Silver Jubilee are being made even at this early date. For instance, is shown the fine-grain silver coin to be minted for the celebrations and sold to the public at special prices. BELOW is seen the three-handled loving cup one of thousands of mugs and bakers for a jubilee showing. This particular cup is a first prize winner and will be presented to Her Majesty the Queen. LORD MARLBOROUGH AND FAMILY ON VISIT TO U. S.

SYNOPSIS—THE WEDDING PARTY

CHAPTER SIXTY-SIX

The wedding party continued merry and noisy. Stan's mother was not half a bad sport after her initial shock, and her other kids went easy. He made a few pointed remarks, confined to Gray Judy's ear.

But Judy refused to be drawn into controversy. Her heart was too sore. She crushed to flame into resentment. What did it matter what they said about Nick . . . They didn't matter . . .

Stan's mother took on a sort of pained sulkiness. He treated Judy with an elaborate politeness barbed with mockery. It was hard to bear. Judy longed to get away from it all. To go up to the city— find work—

She shook off that memory of the other time she had gone to the city. That was different. Fate had stacked the cards against her then. Now she had more poise—she felt capable of holding her own against the world . . . But why think about it . . .

Judy could look back on that mad day when Nick sailed and see it in its true colors. Madame had been right . . . ! It would have been unnerving for her to have gone with Nick. A splendid —crazy thing to do . . . bound to end in complete ruin for both. Madame was right—even Nick couldn't have forced the world to accept her . . . Nick belonged to the world. She didn't have the right to muddle up his life . . .

But oh, the thought of what might have been! Starry nights out there in the Back of Beyond . . . and Nick. Temple bells and porcelain towers . . . color and incense . . . and Nick. Always Nick, with his dear brown face and his steady grey eyes, his thick, reaching hair, the shoulder steadying her with its—his smile . . . "All right, Judy . . . ?" Nick, flying out of the moon—straight into her heart. Nick holding her tight . . . in his arm in the hush of the mountain night—Nick, white beneath his tan, his eyes stricken, murmuring "Darling . . . Good-bye . . .

Yes, Madame had been right. It would have ruined both their lives, the mad gesture of flight. But there were times when Judy wished Madame had found the steadier Better to go out in a glorious spurt of flame than to smoulder here in the grey dampness.

Deadlock . . . Stan's hatred was keeping him constant as no love could have done. He was out a great deal but it was obviously with male companions, Judy suspected that he was seeing very little of Eunice at present. He was determined to give his wife no weapon to use against him.

And so the silent warfare continued—while to the world they presented a smooth and unruffled manner. Judy even accompanied Stan to Eunice Wilson's house on the night of her elaborate swimming party.

The Wilson house was elaborately decorated for the night's celebration. The walls of the long ball room were hung with cedar boughs and thick bronzing, turning it into a scene of Byzantine splendor. Beyond, was the swimming pool, done up in a way to make a Roman emperor weep with envy. The colored pool lights gave it a rich color. The chambranles and the capitals of the Byzantine pillars rising from the tanks were polychrome, and up the pillars themselves flowering vines had been trailed so that the place was a bower of summer. The water in the tank had been colored faintly pink and rose petals had been scattered on its surface.

Eunice herself was quite as elaborately posed to match the splendor. Her gown was gold brocade, molded to her beautiful figure, and ending in a narrow train which trailed when she walked like the tail of a golden snake. A last bizarre touch had been added by touching the eyes of her hair with gold and purple powder in the manner of the ancient Egyptian beauties. Her slender arms were covered with exquisitely carved gold bracelets from wrist to elbow, and an antique necklace of wrought gold clasped her throat . . .

Beside his gorgeous wife, the banker, Wilson, seemed more stodgy and commonplace and middle-aged than ever.

A great weariness was in Judy's heart tonight. All of this elaborate show filled her with a faint disgust. So empty . . . so futile . . . Judy would be glad to get back to the simple and rose petals had been scattered on its surface.

She thought of Nick — pictured Nick and herself flying in the night sky, free and sleepy earth. Thought of that night of mountain moonlight when Nick had held her in his arms and told her of his love . . . Nick . . . Nick . . . Nick . . . Judy knew she had been with all this display when she first met Nick, but in the light of a city for that frightened, unsophisticated girl who had been herself, was the heart, gold and dreadfully all this had mattered then. How she had despised it . . . Judy clenched fearful last Stan should not approve of her. Stan, who had never known love she had given Stan Stan . . . and now, between this, this silent hatred with the sneers from indifference!

Because of her secret contempt, Judy had taken little pains with her appearance tonight but by the curious law of opposites, she looked unusually well. She wore back net which fell almost to the floor in a long full skirt. By contrast, her shoulders and arms were very white. Her hair drawn back in a waving mass behind her ears, lent a quaint dignity to her face. Stan was indifferent when Stan danced frequently with Eunice, his black head close to her golden one. This evening was simply something to be gotten through with as painlessly as possible . . .

The evening took on added tempo. Eunice was serving champagne to night—an extravagance which had caused a fierce scene between her husband and herself. As usual Eunice had won . . .

A shout rose to the laughter—a greater abandon in the dancing. Couples passed, flushed and flushed cheek. Hiding places were sought in corners, behind potted palms, under staircases. Men and girls disappeared into the cars parked about the driveway. In the shadow of a pillar, Judy saw the massive figure of Fred Wilson, his face dark and brooding. Following his eyes she saw Eunice, held tight in Stan's arms Stan's lips poised over Eunice's provocative mouth, and the man's eyes were avid.

Judy looked away disgust in her heart—disgust mingled with the fear which Wilson's resentful face could always inspire.

A second shout and a babble of voices. Eunice had ripped off her brocaded gown. A gasp, like a summer breeze—then a roar of laughter at this latest prank. She wore a thin gold silk swimming suit under her evening dress. Highly delighted with the sensation she was causing, Eunice posed there for a moment, seductive, arrogantly beautiful, a slim arrow of gold. Then, she slipped into the purple water in a clean dive which left hardly a ripple.

The shouts which went up instantly after dimmed all the others. Cheeks flushed, eyes shining with excitement and the champagne he had drunk, Stan ran to the end of the diving board and followed. Yet, regardless of his tuxedo.

He came up, black hair dripping like a seal. His shook it back impatiently . . . reached Eunice with a couple of powerful strokes and seizing her began solemnly to dance in the shallow part of the tank, to the music which drifted in from the ball room beyond.

Perhaps, only Judy, of that whole company, saw Fred Wilson's face at that moment. It was black with murderous dislike as the man looked at his wife's sensuously clad golden body held close against Stan's dripping suit.

Bulls were provided for all those who cared to swim. The tank became a riot of colors—men and girls splashing—diving — crawling up on the sides to sit sipping champagne and smoking.

Judy wandered back into the other room, tired of the hectic gayety. Of the shouts which echoed from the glass dome and mingled with the orchestra . . .

A servant touched her on the arm. "Mrs. Carter . . . Someone to speak on the telephone . . ."

Martha's voice coming over the phone—and Martha was weeping. "Miss Judy? Oh, please come right away—right away . . . The doctor says Madame is dying . . ."

STATE DINNER IS CANCELLED

Lieutenant Governor Acts as Premier Declines to Attend

Toronto, Feb. 1 (CP)—Official circles today discussed the unprecedented action of Hon. Dr. Herbert Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor, in cancelling the state dinner traditionally held following the opening of the Legislature, because Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn and his Cabinet had declined to attend.

A printed announcement, forwarded to persons who had already been invited, told of the cancellation. It read:

"His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor, regrets that, the Prime Minister of Ontario and his Cabinet, having declined the invitation to be present at the state dinner on February 20th, this function will not be held.

"His Honour trusts that you have not been inconvenienced."

Premier Hepburn, in St. Thomas last night, and could not be reached, had announced Thursday he could not attend because it would not be consistent with the policy he had chosen in connection with the office of Lieutenant-Governor. Previously, he had stated he felt the upkeep of Chorley Park, the official residence of the Lieutenant-Governor, which is paid by the Province, was an "unnecessary expense" for the taxpayer. He said he would not vote the sum required annually for its upkeep at the next session of Legislative Assembly.

The Premier made it clear, however, he did not wish his action to be construed as a discourtesy to Dr. Bruce. His quarrel, he said, was with the office of Lieutenant-Governor and in his opinion, unnecessary expense is entailed to the Government.

The Lieutenant-Governor is appointed by the Governor-in-Council at Ottawa and his salary is paid by the Dominion Government. The Provincial Government House, Chorley Park, is maintained by Provincial funds, and there is nothing in the Constitution which says a Government house shall be provided.

A few days ago, Premier Hepburn in discussing his desire to eliminate the cost of upkeep of Chorley Park, said he had no intention of leaving the Lieutenant-Governor without an office or premises. There were, he said, admittedly appointed offices at Queen's Park set aside for his use.

FARM LOAN ACT TO BE EXTENDED

Concentrate Entire Administration Under Federal Government

Ottawa, Feb. 2—(CP)—Greeted with approval in all quarters of the House of Commons the second of Prime Minister R. B. Bennett's reform measures is now before the House of Commons. It is an amendment to the Farm Loan Act to facilitate and extend its operations and to make additional credit available for farmers and precipitated the longest debate of the session so far. The resolution preliminary to the introduction of the bill was moved into committee yesterday.

The chief effect of the bill is to concentrate the entire administration of the Farm Loan scheme under the Federal Government. Up to the present, enabling legislation by provincial legislatures has been necessary to make the scheme operative, and Ontario, Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island have never come under the scheme. The amendments will make it possible for the Federal Farm Loan Board to extend credit to farmers in those provinces.

Conservative, Liberal and Farmer members endorsed the change although some of them pressed for a further lowering of interest rates on farm loans which now stands at five and a half percent.

Some members believed it should be reduced to four percent; even though it meant a loss to the government.

Minister of Finance E. N. Rhodes, who sponsored the bill, believed reductions might be possible in the future but could promise nothing immediately. He will speak on it again next week.

The administration of the Farm Loan Act and the personnel of the Farm Loan Board in the past came in for some criticism from Erick Willis (Cons., South) who thought the entire machinery might have to be changed. On the whole however, the members who spoke had little criticism to offer. Agnes MacPhail (Prog., South East Grey) and Conservatives from Ontario criticized the Ontario Government for shutting off loans under the provincial scheme, but Ontario Liberals placed the blame on the former Conservative Government which, they claimed, had allowed political influence to creep into the administration and encouraged a deluge of applications which could not be speedily dealt with by the new government.

Parliament Buildings Burned Down 19 Years Ago

At 9 p.m. February 3rd, 1916, C. R. Stewart, at that time chief doorkeeper of the House of Commons, discovered a fire in the reading-room of the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa. The fire spread rapidly and by the time firemen succeeded in getting it under control, the buildings were almost totally destroyed, save for the library wing and the walls. Seven were burned to death, including two women guests to the Speakers' Chambers, Col. A. P. Sherwood, chief commissioner of police, reported that there was no reason to believe the fire was the result of a malicious act. Public opinion, however, alleged German explosives had caused the blaze. The beautiful buildings which now adorn Canada's Parliament Hill were rebuilt at a cost of $3,750,000. The above is a photo taken on Feb. 4, 1916, of the fire.

POET, BIRD-LOVER VISITS NEW YORK

Wallace Havelock Robb Talks of Spiritual Side of Birds

NEW YORK, Feb. 2.—(CP)—Wallace Havelock Robb, ornithologist and poet to whom wild birds flock with a faith, that baffles even him, settled back in his hotel room here after a trip from his home near Kingston, Ont., and explained his effort to educate the public to the spiritual side of birds as a "labor of love". He was artistically anxious, he said, to reveal the better side of birds of prey.

Mr. Robb started his work 15 years ago on a purely poetical basis, but he gained such a reputation as a naturalist that he founded a sanctuary on his 500-acre estate, Abbey Dawn at Kingston, and is now on speaking terms with virtually every wild bird in Canada.

Robb, a short, slim man with thinning brown hair and bristling brown moustache and goatee, refuses to wear either collar or tie. This rule even holds good for formal occasions, when, aside from the usual evening jacket and trousers, he wears a white silk vest under a shirt piped with purple, which is open to the waist.

"When you have a shirt cut as low as that," he said, "you have to have something in back of it, so I wear the vest. Then I voila beautiful purple silk sash about my waist. The women all fall in love with it at once and it is the envy of all men."

Mr. Robb produced a set of slides which he used in his lectures (the reason for his being in the United States) and held one to the light. On it was seen a human hand on which sat five birds.

"There," he said, "is a wild plover brooding five of her young in my hand. See how her one eye is on me—she doesn't look at the hand. There is perfect faith there. In my sanctuary all the birds come just at my call. They know me now, but that plover didn't know me. She just trusted me."

A man indicted as R. E. Russell, about 36, an insurance agent, was accused by the government of participating in a plot to collect insurance premiums on a dozen negroes who were still alive from an insurance company for whom he was an employe.

The 13 "dead" men were summoned by Assistant District Attorney R. G. Draper to take the witness stand.

Farmington, N.H., Feb. 2 (CP) —The well known hunter who killed two birds with one stone has his counterpart here in the man who caught two fish on one hook.

Today, Mr. Burke avers, he pulled in his line, there was no sign of the perch but on the hook dangled a five and a quarter pound crab which, the fishermen said, had swallowed the perch.

FIVE-NATION AIR ALLIANCE LAUNCHED BY POWERS

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Gravette, Ark., Feb. 4 (CP) — John Ret Bangs, Jr., bid for a genius in pointed advertising here when he inserted the following notice in the local weekly:

New York, Feb. 4 (CP)—The direct translation of Chaucer into contemporary English at times conveys the "pretty tough stuff" to present day English, modern translator of the entire Canterbury Tales.

Chaucer in middle English," he explained today, "doesn't seem to be so bawdy, but when you get it over into modern English it is rather startling."

He explained his translation made by reading the passages he imagined a man of Chaucer's intellect and times would read them, then rendering them into modern English with an attempt to retain their gusto.

"The general effect," said Bill, "while it may be rather startling, is not shocking because its phrases are so naturally used in the rollicking spirit of good fun."

New York, Feb. 4 (CP) — Six thousand men and women, 90 per cent of whom are prominent in industry, finance and society have voluntarily placed their fingerprints on file at police headquarters since city authorities urged them to do so six years ago to aid in identification in case of death.

John J. Sullivan, Assistant Chief Inspector in charge of the Detective Bureau, disclosed this today, when he reviewed the invitations. All such prints are kept in strict confidence.

New York, Feb. 4 (CP) — Bill Wilkes, 15, was feeling better in bed by in a Brooklyn Hospital after doctors had removed the stick of a lollypop he swallowed.

Bill was licking the tid-bit last August, when the fire engines went by. Bunging after, he tripped, fell and swallowed the lollypop.

He forgot all about it until two weeks ago when a bad stomach ache landed like appendicitis to the doctors.

When they opened Bill up it looked like a lollypop—and was.

Chicago, Feb. 4 (CP)—Stench bombs work two ways—depending who is on the business end.

Police used the missile which is a favorite with gangsters when they raided a residence Nick Stefanos, 27, when a warrant failed to find him. They got a warrant, stick it under the door and "opened it," police slowly tossed a bomb through a window and yelled, and—not in vain.

Germans May Re-Arm Providing They Enter The League of Nations

5-Nation Air Alliance Pact Launched by France, Britain

REPEAL CLAUSES

Believe Alliance Fair And Germany Must Accept

(By Melvin K. Whiteleather)
(Copyright 1935, by the Associated Press)

Berlin, Feb. 4—Authoritative quarters said today, Germany, on the basis of a preliminary examination, was unable to accept the new France-British accord as it stands, Reichsfuehrer Hitler, a French source reported, "is very reserved and non-committal".

London, Feb. 4—(CP)—A new scheme to buttress the shaky foundation of European peace, envisaging Germany's restoration to complete equality in the society of nations, commanded the considerations today of the French and Foreign Ministers of Great Britain and France, the new formula would provide for a simultaneous settlement on all the problems which currently beset European stability.

The negotiations gave France's campaign for security its mass; important impetus since the great war in a proposal for regional aerial defence pacts to provide the nations participating reciprocal assurances of assistance in repelling an unprovoked attack.

Great Britain and France plainly indicated, indeed, that they do not envisage into such a definitive alliance and suggested that the other European powers be invited to join.

The conversations today centered on negotiations with Germany

MAJOR SHEPARD TO GO ON STAND

Miss Bdandon Subjected To Stiff Cross Examination

Topeka, Kas., Feb. 4—(AP)—Maj. Charles A. Shepard wagering his life insurance against $100,000 took his turn on the witness stand today in his accused federal court trial for wife murder.

Shortly after the government completes its case, the defense plans to have the 63-year-old retired army officer called to take the stand and deny the government's charges he fatally poisoned his wife to obtain $100,000 he might be free to marry the young saltractive Grace Brandon, army post stenographer.

"I am innocent" said the former army officer in Federal Court, described by defense attorneys as the victim of a "gold digger" in his relations with the 30-year-old Grace Field, Tex. typist. "I will tell my story on the witness stand as I did in the previous trial.

In that trial he was convicted and sentenced to life imprisonment.

As the government's principal witness, Miss Brandon told the jury last week of the gifts and letters she received from the major before his wife's death in June, 1929, at Fort Riley, Kas., and his suggestion they elope shortly after the funeral.

Under cross examination she admitted she had duped her December lover by "dashing" other officers and "peddling" bills she requested him to pay. She declared they had been alienated by his plea to burn his letters after his arrest.

CHARGES ATTEMPT MADE TO 'FRAME'

Reilly, Counsel for Hauptmann Will Call Medical Expert

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 4 (AP)—Reilly, Defence Counsel Edward J. Reilly injected a new charge into the Bruno Hauptmann murder and kidnaping trial with the complaint over police handling of his witnesses. He charges an attempt had been made to "frame" him Sunday at his Brooklyn home.

Reilly asked police of New Jersey, Reilly said, "have interfered with witnesses for the defense."

His attempt to "frame" him, Reilly said would make "a mockery" of the jury trial to "a black bearskin coat" called at his home and offered to fix up a story about Hauptmann "that would be believed even though it was a fake."

Reilly said the man suggested a walk through the park while he told his story. Suspicious of this, Reilly asserted he suspected was based on the likelihood arms can would take a picture of them together for "framing" purposes.

"I refused to get out," Reilly said.

Reilly obtained a permission of New York city officials to call Dr. M. Edward Martin, Deputy Chief Medical Examiner, to testify in support of the defence contention the Lindbergh baby died of pneumonia and not a fractured skull.

ICE-YACHTSMEN DROWNED IN LAKE

Pretender to Hungarian Throne Narrowly Escapes

Budapest, Hungary, Feb. 4.—(AP) —Archduke Albrecht, pretender to the Hungarian throne, narrowly escaped drowning today, when an ice-boat overturned through thin ice on Lake Balaton near here.

Two other ice-yachtsmen were drowned.

Unusually mild weather weakened the ice covering on the lake until it was unable to bear the weight of the boat.

Skimming across the thawing ice surface at 60 miles an hour, Albrecht and his companions, caught between enormous fissures in the ice, found themselves suddenly propelled toward a pile of rocks and what appeared to be certain death.

Their fate was momentarily concealed from horrified onlookers when a heavy snowstorm suddenly enveloped the lake.

Rescue parties immediately set forth in search of the ice boaters convinced all must have perished.

It was later learned the ice-boat in which the Archduke was sailing turned completely out of the ice fissures.

Another craft, navigated by his fellow sportsmen, careened into the area, meanwhile, carrying its crew of five to their deaths.

SMUGGLING TO U.S. NOT INDICTABLE

Judge in Montreal Court Rules as Four Appear For Trial

Montreal, Feb. 4 (CP)—Attempts to smuggle alcoholic liquors into foreign countries wherein such importation is forbidden by law, do not constitute an indictable offence, Judge Jules Desmarais ruled in court today as the adjourned preliminary hearing of eight men and a woman charged with conspiracy to defraud the Dominion Government of $5,000,000 by liquor-smuggling reopened.

The ruling was rendered, as the Crown prosecutor, Bernard Bronfman brothers, Sam, Allan, Harry and Abe, Mrs. Evelyn Carline of Halifax, William Yule and three Montreal men appeared in court.

Judge Desmarais said he was of the opinion such export of liquor was not an indictable offence as charged by the Crown in the case against the accused and no evidence should be allowed to prove it. He found such export of liquor made the shipper liable to a forfeiture and a fine of $100 under summary conviction but under these provisions no indictable offence was disclosed.

TEST LEGALITY MICHIGAN DIVORCE

Detroit Resident Arrested in Canada For Non-Support

Chatham, Ont., Feb. 4 (CP)—The legality of a Michigan divorce, as affecting Canadian citizens will be tested in a case which started in city police court this morning. Robert Gow, 36, of Detroit came to this city to visit relatives and on the complaint of J. W. McKillop, brother of Mrs. Gow, the Detroit man was arrested on a charge of failing to provide for his wife, now said to be a patient in a hospital.

Gow claims he obtained a divorce in a Michigan court last October. An attempt will be made to show the divorce should stand in this province as the couple had lived for some time in Michigan and both had taken out their first American citizenship papers.

The case was adjourned for a week and in the meantime Gow will have his liberty on a $1,000 bail bond.

TORONTO, Feb. 4.—(CP)—Removal of W. E. Beaman, Relief officer at Essex, and placing the town under the supervision of Gilbert C. Storey, Administrator of the Border area, was announced today by Hon. David A. Croll, Ontario Minister of Welfare and Municipal Affairs.

"Money made for the needy has gone to wage earners and people with hidden resources," Mr. Croll said. "Slip shod administration has re-routed Provincial funds away from the destitute. We won't tolerate irregularities of the kind uncovered by our investigators".

Mr. Croll cited one case of a man, whom he said had drawn government fees on two occasions that year but had remained on relief until Feb. 1, when he went to Florida for the rest of the winter.

"It may well be a matter of careless investigation and faulty judgment," Mr. Croll stated. "But there's no room for laxity in handling public funds intended for the destitute."

ATTEMPTING TO CUT ICE, DROWNED

Slipped Into Swift Current Trying to Clear Flume

Appleton, Ont., Feb. 4 (CP) — Lloyd A. Robertson, 43, was drowned in the Mississippi River here during the week end.

Robertson, an engineer at Caldwell's Mills, he arrived at work Saturday to find the flume of the mill clocked with ice and the engine room flooded. Apparently Robertson attempted to cut the ice and in so doing slipped into the swift current and was drowned. His body was recovered two hours later by other employees of the mill, who on their arrival at the mill began a search for Robertson. They found a rope tied to a tree and on pulling in the other end from the river found it fastened to Robertson's body. It was thought he tied the rope about his body as a safety measure but was unable to haul himself ashore against the current.

FISCH BROUGHT CARD BOARD BOX WITNESS SWEARS

Hauptmann Guest Testifies He Saw Isador at Hauptmann's

MEN, WOMEN, LADDER

Witness Swears He Was With Accused All Evening of April 2

By WILLIAM A. KINNEY

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 4.—A defence witness today admitted a man he saw in a car with a ladder near the Lindbergh home the day Baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., was kidnapped and slain resembled Bruno Richard Hauptmann who is on trial for the crime.

The witness, Sebastian Benjamin Lupica, a Princeton student, insisted, however, he could not identify Hauptmann as the man.

Claims Accused At Home

Hauptmann's second important alibi—for the night on which the $50,000 ruffle Lindbergh ransom was paid in a Bronx graveyard — was supported in his trial today by one of his friends who said Hauptmann was at his home on that night.

Hans Kloeppenburg testified he was at the Hauptmann home all evening of April 2, 1932, the date of the ransom payment, and he and Hauptmann spent the evening playing a mandolin and a guitar.

Kloeppenburg and Hauptmann Isidor Fisch came to a farewell party at the Hauptmann home before sailing for Germany where he died, bearing a package about 14 inches long 5 or 6 inches high, 7 to 8 inches wide.

Hauptmann testified in his own behalf Fisch gave him a shoebox for safe keeping and the shoe box contained unknown to him, the $50,000 Lindbergh ransom money which was found in his garage.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 4 (CP)— Peter H. Sommers, bricklayer, of the Flach-Sharpe side of Bruno Richard Hauptmann's garage structure, had to go back over his story of detail by detail today as the State sought to prove it false.

Sommers insisted he saw two men and a woman with a ladder there on the night the Lindbergh child was taken, identifying a picture of the dead Isador Fisch as that of one of the men and saying a picture of the suicided Morrow maid, Violet Sharpe, closely resembled the woman.

Frenzied Merry Court Scenes

Justice Trenchard said he regretted "movies and talking pictures have been taken in a court of law by orders of the court." "It was done," the Justice added, "only after methods that are commonly undertaken."

"This subject, this matter will be investigated.

Interference produced another witness to say he saw a man in an auto with a ladder near the Lindbergh home on the night baby Lindbergh was kidnapped and slain.

Man With Ladder

Sebastian Benjamin Lupica, Princeton student, said he distinctly recalled the man while he was driving home from school on the afternoon of March 1, 1932, and that the man was Hauptmann.

He followed to the witness stand Sommers, whose story he saw two men and a woman with a ladder an hour after the kidnapping was rigorously attacked by defense.

Lupica said the man he saw was thin, about 40 years old and in the rear of his car, he testified, he saw two sections of a ladder and said sections were the same as those shown to him later by police.

He said he knew the man as the trial under subpoena by the State, who did not call him.

"Now as you passed that car," C. Floyd Fisher of defence counsel asked, "did you notice anything in the car other than the occupants?"

"Yes, I did."

"What did you see there?"

"I saw two sections of a ladder."

He said the man in the car didn't look like a foreigner, appeared to be "a city chap."

He said the car carried Mercer County, New Jersey registration, and was a dark blue or black sedan.

Under cross-examination, however, he admitted he had said Hauptmann "had a resemblance to the man," and he asserted such was still his testimony.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz produced newspapers articles bearing his name in which he was purported to have said Hauptmann was the man. Lupica declared he had been paid for the articles but said he did not write them; also that he complained to the newspaper's city editor about them.

He had "phoned his brother in Sarnia and asked him to come to London for a conference with General S.C. Newburn at 10:30 a.m. He waited for some hours but his brother did not arrive. Another 'phone call in the afternoon from Gordon Labatt and Newburn to the front of a London hospital.

"What did you find there?"

"I saw my brother's car"

"Did you examine it?"

"No the police came with Inspector Nelson."

Detective Sergeant of the London police came to the box to corroborate Hugh Labatt's story of Gordon's brother's car.

William T. Brent, middle-aged farmer of Adelaide, Ont., near Bright's Grove, told of going to a farmhouse on the Bright's Grove-Sarnia road on Aug. 14.

"On the morning I saw a large car with American license plates. It was green, with black trimmings and red wheels," he said.

502 MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN RESULT

Local Branch of Canadian Concert Association Exceeds Objective

Five hundred and two members were obtained by the Belleville Branch of the Canadian Concert Association in last week's campaign to extend the subscription lists to bring possibly three musical programs to Belleville during the course of the winter. This objective had been five hundred members. The association therefore starts under most favorable auspices.

With the exception of a few memberships secured at Deloro the subscribers are all residents of Belleville.

The fact that the objective was reached gives the assurance of a fine series of programs for the members of the concert association within the next three months.

Lovers of music, particularly the musicians of the city, were strenuously loyal to the opportunity to bring noted musicians to Belleville and from the beginning were confident that with effort the desired result could be obtained.

Miss Irmgarde Westerman of Massey Hall, Toronto, was in charge of the campaign and Miss Leona Riggs, was chairman of membership. Miss Riggs, commenting today on the success of the drive, said:

"We are indeed quite pleased at the results."

The choice of the programs has yet to be made by the committee. Attendance at the concerts is by membership only.

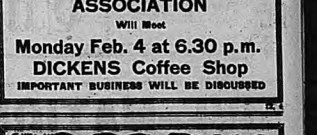
Police News

Mystery surrounds the disappearance, on a large scale, from the oysters from the C.P.R. station platform some time Saturday, according to Mr. S. Croft, C.P.R. express agent at the station, the tub of oysters arrived in Belleville from the east, early Saturday morning and were left on the station platform. Two after the other two succeeding trains, one going each way, had passed through the city, the tub was found to be missing.



Local police authorities were notified and upon investigating it was disclosed that the tub had been rolled across the platform between the tracks, where the marks disappeared. According to police theory the tub was rolled across the platform and taken aboard one of the subsequent trains to pass through the city. A check-up at the Toronto and Montreal terminals failed to throw any light on the missing oysters. The tub was addressed to the firm of Ed Pinder's sons and Sons, Belleville. Constable Isard investigated.

Eighteen transients occupied the cell block at the police station over the week end. It registered a full house Sunday night while only six put in an appearance on Saturday night. No arrests were necessary in the city over the week end, all quiet and tranquil in local police circles.

Mr. R. V. Illsley, manager of the local branch of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and Mr. W. R. McCreary were also added to the committee of the president and secretary to assist in the work of formation.

The suggestion of the formation of the united boards followed the opinion of several members of the local board that nothing concrete in the way of advancing the interests of the cheese industry had been effected at the recent meeting of the Ontario Cheese Patrons' Association of Ontario, held at Kingston, and that combined action on the part of all country boards was necessary before any actual advance in the industry could be made.

Report of Meeting Given

Following the opening of the meeting of the local Board in this city on Saturday by president Montgomery, secretary Fred Mallory gave a comprehensive outline of the Kingston meeting, which was attended by himself and the local president. He referred to the scheme promoted by Mr. R. A. Ness, whereby the appointment of an overseas representative would be made to look into the markets and to sell the cheese from this country. This plan is expected to be submitted to all factories, following its general approval by the Kingston conference.

"What about promoting the sale of our own cheese in Canada, was anything said about that?" questioned Mr. E. V. Illsey, an interested listener to the brief outline of the meeting being given by Mr. Mallory.

"There wasn't any mention made of that," answered the secretary.

"What this meeting was specifically called for," continued Mr. Mallory, "was to give you the report on the Kingston one, and to ask your opinion on the matter of whether we should or should not support or oppose this report movement, and whether we should pay fees to the United Boards Secretary's job then. That's the question that is before the Board."

"My opinion is that if we formed our own association of united cheese boards from throughout the Province and created a provincial executive to speak for us on many matters on behalf of the industry, we would be very much further ahead," added Mr. Mallory.

"An excellent idea, and one that should be carried out at once," responded Mr. Illsey. "The situation that has developed in the cheese industry lately appears to be this: Those who produce cheese need help. Those who are in a position to give their help realize this and are willing to help. The risk is however, that owing to the lack of cohesion of ideas we may get exactly nowhere, as much as we may sit and discuss things."

Meeting Good Idea

"I know of no other way to help this industry than to get those best qualified to express an opinion on the matter and to the cheese boards of the Province we will have to turn to find this. It seems to me, that the Kingston meeting could best be described as barging off at a new tangent I will not comment upon the setting up of any representative for the handling of export, except to remind you of the Wheat Pool."

"The most important thing we face is to double the cheese sale and consumption in our own ontario. It appears, that the committees and conventions, that meet to discuss various matters connected with the industry are just screaming; they are getting nowhere. There are years to be, however, some way in which we can get together on many matters. Why not invite all these cheese boards to send three representatives, meet here in Belleville, the ideally located centre, and drive into the matter of cheese and take up the best method of procuring assistance from the governments. Get all the boards here. Boil down the questions to the essential ones, then name, say, five men to take up these matters with those who can help."

"Time is essential, the weeks are slipping by. Both Houses will be sitting in two weeks and Easter will be here before we know it. Let the export field be dealt with by the export boards. Now is the time to begin to weld and combine, and to do this best you will have to get the various groups officially together."

"Wouldn't this organization of cheese boards be liable to be misunderstood, at this time as a direct reverse feeling of the Kingston meeting?" questioned Secretary Mallory. He also pointed out by the secretary that the eastern boards in particular felt specially keen about organizing along similar lines.

Mr. W. R. McCreary called attention to the press reports of the Kingston meeting. "I can't help but feel, that some of those suggestions passed on there are absolutely destructive to the cheese industry. Why bother with the export field; private interests are already looking after that end of the business. What we want is competition and the benefit of domestic trade. To do it. When we put cheese on sale in this Country on bloc, we create a condition that we've been fighting to avoid. The absolutely in favor of Mr. Illsey's idea of having a meeting here, and until we do organize and have a competent spokesman, we're lost—drifting."

Buyers Also Invited

Mr. McCreary followed up with the introduction of the previous motion that invitations be sent to the cheese boards to have representatives meet in this city and to elect a spokesman. The resolution was later amended to have the buyers represented also at the conference.

In arguing for better facilities as central location for the meeting, Mr. Illsey called attention to the fact that in this district "we have the cheese industry very much at heart, and have it worked up to a higher point than Kingston or any other suggested place."

A strong public tribute of appreciation was paid by Mr. McCreary to the work being carried on by secretary Mallory in the interests of the local Cheese Board.

Mailed cards will be despatched local members announcing the date of the special meeting to be held.

INTRODUCE BILL FOR 48 HR. WEEK

Provides One Statutory Day of Rest in Every Week

Ottawa, Feb. 4—(CP)— Private Members' Legislation will again have right of way in the House of Commons today. It may be, however, that the full time of sitting will not be required to dispose of matters, while individual members of the House desire to discuss. A disposition to give reform legislation of the government Hind will not has been apparent for some time now, and members are not inclined to occupy the time of the house in pressing their own proposals.

The introduction of another reform measure is expected during the week. This is the Bill 48 which an 8 hour day and 48 hour week will be re-established. It will provide also for a statutory one day of rest in every week.

The legislative implements the resolution adopted several years ago by the International Labor organization, and which provides for which Canada has for so long held a seat. Provision for the 48 hour rest was adopted at Geneva in 1921, while the eight-hour day and 48 hour week was suggested, when the general conference took place in Washington some years ago and has been the subject of frequent reference in the House since their adoption.

Second Reading

Second reading of the unemployment and social insurance bill will probably be moved during the week, while the resolution amending the Farm Loans Act seeks provide a subject of exhaustive discussion; but week will be passed. Before it is the House will go for which it forms a basis will be introduced and advanced. The government, pointing as it does for exclusive federal governmental assistance, with control, will make the fund for lending purposes available to farmers in all Provinces of the Dominion without enabling legislation.

Tomorrow evening the Senate will resume sittings after an adjournment of 10 days following adoption of the throne speech. Members of the upper chamber with mind some bills awaiting their consideration as a result of the progress made in the Commons during their interval of rest.

Amendments to the Criminal Code, the Penitentiary Act and interpretation Act will come before the Senate. One the first implements a request of the Attorney General of Saskatchewan providing for a jury of 12 instead of 12 in criminal cases in that Province. Under the Pension Act amendments, the Pensions Board will be given power to appoint or re-appoint a pension commissioner for not less than a seven-year term. The Interpretation Act amendment lists "Remembrance Day"—Nov. 11—into the list of Canada's legal holidays.

FISHERMEN SAFE IN BRONTE AGAIN

Captain Bray With Crew of Six Rescue Men From Ice Floes

Bronte, Feb. 4 (CP)—Twenty-six hours on Lake Ontario, their fishing boat locked among grinding, slowly drifting floes of ice, while airplane flew the skies and power boats ploughed through the ice-clogged waters in search of them, were just a memory to three fishermen of this village today.

Ken McDonald, Byron Dorland and Louis Joyce, back home again and none the worst, were thanking their stars for the fine seamanship and good fortune of Captain William Bray, who, with a crew of six, cruised to their rescue.

It was shortly after three o'clock Friday afternoon when the fishing boat, Dauntless and tender Lucy Ann, left the three fishermen had visited their gill nets, broke her propeller shaft. Unable to make headway, drifting through the fields of ice, the three young men tried to signal to shore, four miles away. When darkness fell, they were able to signal with flares, and search parties set out.

With enough food to keep them comfortably, and comparatively mild weather, the three were safe except for the danger of having their boat smashed between ice-floes. They escaped that menace, and held out hopefully until Captain Bray's boat found them.

250 Persons Escape Ice In Lake Erie

Fort Erie, Ont., Feb. 4 (CP) — Between 200 and 250 persons owe their lives today to the kindly ministrations of an onshore wind and the efforts of Captain John J. Daly and a crew of 14 Buffalo coast guards, who combined to save them from being marooned on ice-floes in Lake Erie.

The 200 or more fishermen, including a number of women, were imperilled in the lake, when a southwest wind caused surface ice to separate from the main ice field Saturday. In many instances, fishermen had left most of their equipment.

Captain Daly with his cutter and crew cruised to the aid of scores of stranded fishermen. He estimated that there must have been 250.

Miss Mildred Beam and Miss Marion Wilhelm, of Fort Erie district, were in danger for some time, but assisted ashore after the storm died.

A more tragic ending would have resulted, had the fishermen and women been set adrift last night in the strong southwest wind, blowing off-shore, shifted the surface ice into the turbulent main body of the lake.

GERMANY CAN RE-ARM

will be opened immediately looking toward settlement of the armament and security questions and with the Reich's return to the League of Nations.

The proposal to be placed before Chancellor Adolf Hitler centres around a proviso in regard of the military clauses on the Treaty of Versailles are spot with Germany for the past 16 years. Such a concession would bring a successful culmination to the Reichstatthalter unremitting campaign to restore Germany to its full stature as a sovereign power.

Germany On Spot.

The French and British governments, sponsoring the new plan with Italy's approval, are convinced their formula is so fair, Germany must accept or forever be an outcast.

By its terms France will no longer insist the questions of security and Germany's return to Geneva take priority over legalization of the Reich's rearmament. Instead, it is agreed that all problems affecting European tranquility shall be accorded parallel treatment.

In return for this concession France obtained from Great Britain the renewal of the Locarno treaty, claims which have formed the cornerstone of her international foreign policy since the War. The proposed aerial defensive alliance signifies either nation would come to the aid of the other in the event of an unprovoked attack.

Germany, Italy and Belgium are to be invited to participate in this defensive pact.

Despite French confidence the alliance between Great Britain and France is certain to be concluded, the Nazi press, the Reich foreign secretary, made it plain to the press no formal agreement has yet been made.

Because of the distance between Italy and Great Britain, Sir John proposes two alliances be arranged, among Great Britain, Belgium, France and Germany and the north and among Germany and Italy in the south.

Faces Pitfalls

Despite general jubilation in French and British government circles over the results of the conference, the new formula faces pitfalls of Capitals.

The programme contemplates German and British adherence to the Franco-Italian accord negotiated at Rome in the interests of General European peace. It also is planned to have these same two nations participate in a mutual assistance pact for Eastern Europe. Diplomatic quarters, however, are doubtful as to whether Germany and Poland can be persuaded to change the unreceptive attitude they have so far shown toward suggestion for their participation in such a "Locarno" for the east.

The fear also was expressed in some quarters that Germany's agreement may be too late. Germany, it is pointed out may be so strongly armed by the time she is that she will not be concerned whether the guarantees are signed or not.

Finally there are whatever obstacles may be presented in the British and French parliaments.

ALL ILL FROM FOOD

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 4.—(AP)—Leo Dandurand, owner of Montreal Canadiens, of the National Hockey League, said here last night that virtually every member of the squad had become ill after eating a meal in Detroit Thursday night.

The illness, Dandurand said he believed, was a species of food poisoning. All of the players were recovered, Dandurand said, and were in condition to join in Sunday night's contest with St. Louis Eagles.

Dandurand said there was no reason to believe the poisonings were the result of a deliberate plot against the team.

LATE FRED S. NEWMAN

The recent death of ex-Mayor Fred S. Newman of Picton, removes one of the most interesting and prominent municipal figures in Ontario. His association with municipal politics was one of the longest on record. His service in his own town of Picton was but the beginning of a wide interest in every phase of problems relating to government of municipalities and to all matters associated therewith. His work with the Board of Trade took him into the counsels of the Ontario Associated Boards of Trade, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce and he was delegate to the conference of Chambers of Commerce of the Empire. He was an earnest advocate of the Ontario Hydro. These are but a few of the interests which Mr. Newman put before personal interests and health. There is little doubt that the press of activities brought about the decline in health some time ago which finally resulted in his death.

In Eastern Ontario he will be remembered as one of the outstanding figures.

BRITISH VIEWPOINT

Great Britain has found that public works undertakings on a colossal scale for the relief of unemployment are not a solution of the problem, the League of Nations having published a pamphlet in connection with the problem, showing that in Britain work projects have been a failure.

It is even the view of the British public men that the work of this kind are impedimenta to recovery. There are not only the huge costs of these projects at which men work at a level of bare susistence, but the diversion of labor from future construction which would give men employment in future when the country requires the work.

The British way out of the situation is the use of the unemployment insurance, which is on a sound basis, and the creation of a spirit of confidence by balancing of budgets, the lowering of rate of interest and removal of artificial barriers to trade.

Canada has practicaly taken the stand against large undertakings. In the United States, a large program has been carried out to give work to the large army of unemployed. The success of the U.S. plan will work out is yet to be seen as there are many yet who have not found a place in which they may work. What effect the manner in which the United States is trying to solve the problem will have on Canada also remains to be shown for though is no doubt that there is a direct influence on conditions here as a result of any trends across the boundary.

AIR DEFENCE TREATY

Britain and France are offering Germany, Italy and Belgium to join in a Five-Nation Air Treaty for defence purposes. This is an outstanding feature of the announcement of the agreement of the ministers of the two nations, France and Britain who have been meeting in London.

To reinforce peace is the aim of the air defence league which would give the support of the nations in case of any unprovoked air attack.

Sir John Simon said that the first form of attack in a new war would most likely be by way of airplanes. He saw in the alliance a safeguard and protection against unprovoked attack.

Britain and France propose to revise portions of the Versailles Treaty with regard to limitation of German armaments, the alliance against air aggression, the return of Germany into the League, backing of Austrian independence.

The peace of the world according to a statement at London is the aim of the meeting of British and French ministers the past few days at London who have the hope of removing the tendencies to a race of armaments. Conciliation and co-operation are the objects.

Back of it all is the unveiled hope that the Nazis of Germany will see their way to bring Germany back to co-operate in any movement tending towards uniformity of aim. It is felt that a better feeling beween Germany and the rest of Europe would be the best means of restoring international confidence and sense of security.

STUDENTS

The number of students attending the University of Toronto is lower by 465 than last year, leaving a total of 7,809 young men and women in the colleges within the University. The decline is expected as a result of the economic situation to continue for some years.

The crowding of universities has been such that there is not the guarantee of positions for which the students have been preparing themselves. That is very clear to anyone in the past five years. The decline in attendance may help relieve this situation and it may offer opportunity for a little more careful preparation for life-work by those fortunate enough to get to college.

There are several matters which are worthy of consideration. It is a known fact that universally graduates are more and more filling positions in the mercantile world as well as in the professional world and this tendency will no doubt continue as the age is becoming more and more specialized.

There is the question of the suitability of all those who attend—are they of the kind best suited to obtain the most out of their courses so as to be of an advantage to the nation which spends many thousands of dollars on their education? Some persons claim that really few are suited and that much money is wasted in not having the state decide who are to be given the advantage of higher education. Against this of course is the old reply, that no one can tell exactly what is in a student or what he will turn out to be. The student who looks unlikely to a board of examiners may in time make the greatest contribution to the nation in his own way, not in the way the examiners would have him do. For no examining board can measure all the intricacies of mind development and forecast to a nicety what the future has in store for him.

MOTION PICTURES

The report of the Board of Censors of Motion Pictures for Ontario for the fiscal year ended October 31 last shows that 2,161 film subjects were submitted, of which 1,309 were approved. Thirty-six were rejected and 816 underwent "certain deletions or revision." An interesting section of the report is that which deals with British films. The number of feature films imported and exhibited was 58, which is a slight decline as compared with the previous year, but the total number of British films increased to 150, against 108 last year. Of the 150,110 were approved as submitted, 39 were approved with alterations and one was not approved. Particulars are given regarding advertising, a large number of specimens being found incapable of treatment and, therefore, rejected.

Concerning quality, it is admitted that since the formation of the producers' organization in Hollywood last July the films submitted "have been of a higher standard." "It is quite noticeable that many films reviewed since July have been distinctly superior, while there less objectionable to public taste and public morals," says the report. "In many cases they have been entirely free from any offensive sequences or dialogue."

That is excellent; may the good work go on! In the report of the Board mentioned for children and the family circle, however, the board feels that "greater efforts might be made" in the production of more family films, and appeals to the producers for an honest intention to improve the character of the films, and mention is made of the works of Shakespeare, Sheridan, Dumas, Barrie, Poe, Galsworthy, etc., which have been or will be adapted for the screen—Hamilton Spectator.

DAYS OF PIZARRO RECALLED

The famous city of Lima, capital of Peru, has just been celebrating the four hundredth anniversary of its founding by the great Spanish conquistador. People have very little time to spare reading history these days, it seems, but it does no harm to recall the ancient glories of South American adventure. Pizarro laid the basis of Spanish-American rule firmly in Lima, and made it the richest city of the western hemisphere. Peru was the greatest of all Spain's possessions in South America. In two generations it sent over $250,000,000 of silver to the Spanish Court as the King's fifth share of treasure. Small wonder that Philip of Spain sent Viceroys who ruled like Kings and who did much to make Lima a city beautiful.

Later it fell upon evil times. Its wealth decayed. In 1746 a terrible earthquake ruined many of its superb buildings. When Chile beat Peru, the Chilean looted Lima from 1881 to 1884, during three years of occupation. Today, however, Peru is on the upgrade. Her dispute with Colombia settled and her foreign policy dictated by a wise and skilful statesman, President Benavides, Lima is looking forward to a restoration of prosperity. And even yesterday she can point to many things of which she can be justly proud.—Montreal Star.

A jury in Toronto found a man guilty of manslaughter in an accident in which he was driving a motor cycle and Mr. Justice Rose, who claimed that the man was undoubtedly guilty of reckless driving protested that "as long as juries acquit men who are undoubtedly guilty of reckless driving, so long will my family and your families be in danger on the highways of this province." The judge's protest raises a point which should be thought over very carefully.—Chatham News.

MUTED SONG

Under ice the Small dreams go,
Darkened now, and Very slow;
No more singing
In content,
As past summer
Fields they went.

Yet creep near and Listen long,
You can catch a
Muted song.
All their laughter,
All their light
Locked away by Winter's blight;
Yet, still brave and
Glad, they sing
Softly, waiting
For the spring!

ONE PAPER IS NOT ENOUGH for our family, writes a member of the Sidelight Circle, who says the Family of which she is a part, is seriously considering subscribing for several copies of The Great Family Journal instead of the one which has been coming regularly for so many years. Says she, everybody wants the paper at the same time, especially after the evening meal when the family gathers under the "Evening Lamp". And So, she says, if there is any discount, for quantity let me know, and see if we can prevent this battle for possession which is a nightly occurrence. Says she, it's such a dang good paper, but you are never satisfied and keep adding near features and the whole family has gone gaga on one or more features. The Comic Strips are big favorites with Edgar Rice Burrows' "Tarzan", and Mr. and Mrs. Martin Johnson's "Danger Trails" going strong with the juveniles, but interesting the grown-ups as well. "Scott's Scrapbook" is eagerly looked for, says our correspondent, while the boys get a great kick out of the sport news and features. All of which is very gratifying to the management which seeks to build up a "Great Family Journal" in deed and in truth, a daily visitor, always welcome, a necessity, interesting, entertaining and educational. When folks are displessed with their daily paper for any reason it seems as if they make undue haste to express that displeasure—but praise comes more sparingly, hence is doubly welcome.

"MORE BRAINS LESS PULP", said Hon. Frank Oliver, pioneer publisher of Edmonton, and part of the first paper, a six by nine sheet, in that outpost of civilization many years ago. Hence, while The Ontario Intelligencer may not be as large as a number of the big city sheets which run to pulp, we certainly are not short on "brains". Listen to some of the names of folks who write regularly for this newspaper, famous feature writers who find an interesting audience in every family:

Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman, authority on good manners.

Then the nameless legion of camera news men in every land taking pictures of important news happenings and scenes, which find their way into this newspaper so quickly by airplane and telegraph as to be almost miraculous.

Sport illustrations are also kept up to the minute, and the illustrated strip stories, fresh every day with a laugh or a thrill—spell illustrate the miracle of modern newspaper making.

And folks, when you can buy all that for less than two cents a day, we pause to ask; was there ever such tremendous value since the world began?

FACTS ABOUT THE FOOD YOU EAT TO LIVE

Vary The Diet Wisely to Obtain Best Results

By Louis E. Bisch, M. D., Ph. D.

Famous Authority on Health and Psychology.

It is a matter of common knowledge that foods are generally composed of proteins, fats, starches and sugars—not to mention vitamins and water. Few people, however, realize how complex the structure of food really is.

The protein, which we take in in our food, occurs chiefly in the following forms: albumin in milk, white of egg and blood; casein in milk and cheese; myosin and syntonin in muscle; gluiin in flour; vitellin in the yolk of egg; legumin in beans, peas and lentils.

Although the variety of proteins is rather an extensive one, when any of these are utilized by the body—that is, oxidized—they must first be converted into peptones. Peptones, readily absorbed by the tissues, yield heat and energy.

Certain foods are specially rich in protein, and among these may be mentioned cheese, eggs, milk, cheese, fish, broth, beans, oatmeal and wheat.

Fats are composed, chemically, of carbon, hydrogen and oxygen. Such food fats are to be found in the fat of animal meats, in butter and milk, in vegetable oils, in nuts and in other foods, such as olives, chocolate and sweet almonds.

The most important fats are stearin, palmatin, margarin and olein. The oxidation of these fats yields the greatest amount of heat.

The starches and sugars are collectively known as carbohydrates. Under the influence of heat, starch is converted into dextrin and by further action of the digestive juices upon dextrin converts it into sugar.

Starch is found in corn, oats, wheat and other cereals, as well as in peas, beans, potatoes; it is found also in some fruits, and in the roots and stems of many vegetables.

Of sugar there are many varieties; cane sugar, as it is known, as sucrose; grape sugar — glucose—is found in grapes, peaches and other fruits. Other sugars include malt sugar, or maltose, to be found in malt; milk sugar, or lactose, derived from milk; bbet sugar, which is found in beets.

When proteins and carbohydrates are not properly combined in the body, they may be stored up as fat. In fact, this is what causes obesity. When they are, they are carried to excess.

The chief mineral ingredients of food are common salt, or sodium chloride, sodium salt, potassium phosphate, calcium and carbonate also the phosphate and carbonate of calcium and magnesium.

Dr. Bisch' Daily Diet Hint

Diabetics should continue to be careful about diet whether they take insulin or not. Among the foods that are free from carbohydrate, or nearly so, are beef, veal, mutton, lamb, brains, kidneys, liver, sweetbreads, smoked meats, ham, tongue, bacon and fish that is fried, boiled or broiled, but not in bread crumbs.

ALBERTA HIT BY TERRIFIC SNOWSTORMS

Twenty-five thousand panes of glass crashed down when six greenhouses collapsed under the weight of an eight-inch snow which fell in as many hours in Edmonton, adding greatly to the January total to record depth. The heavy blanket, falling when it did, just as the end of a month of real mb zero weather when the mercury slipped to 64 below, greatly hampered the work of crews repairing frozen sewer and watermains.

Last evening a number of citizens who have telephones in their homes were called to their instruments and to their surprise the notes of a piano were distinctly heard. Their astonishment was increased when they discovered that the piano was being played in Port Hope. It appears that the telephone office in Port Hope is in the office of a piano where pianos are on sale and at the time they were called to the telephone a piano was being played in the music store. Every note could be plainly heard here. It is within the range of possibility that conversation will yet be held across the Atlantic through a means of this wonderful invention.

PETES' COACH IS SELECTED

Knotty Lee Will Act For Team Known as "Sea-Horses"

Peterboro Feb. 4 — The Peter senior baseball entry in the Central Ontario League this year will be taken over by Johnson Motors Company here and will be known as the "Sea-Horses". This and the fact that Knotty Lee has been engaged to coach the local team, were the main matters decided upon at a well represented meeting of the senior club executive in the Y.M.C.A. Friday evening.

President Hugh Campbell was in the chair and conducted business. The matter of backing for the club this year—which in 1934 lost money operating—came up for discussion and it was suggested that the Johnson Motor Co. might take it over. After considerable talk on the various angles it was moved and carried by an unanimous vote that this company take over the team and call it "Sea-Horses", purchase the new equipment and uniforms, with a sea-horse crest on the back. The executive was empowered to go on this point and predicted a successful season.

Under Same Executive

The present general executive will continue to run the club's affairs, it was decided, with the exception of being made in the officers elected at the last meeting. A number of new players will be seen on the lineup this summer, it was added, including "Al" Lee of Art Lepper. The ace lefthand pitcher of Toronto Valleyviews last year is at present working here and will twirl for the local seniors this year.

It was unanimously agreed to again engage Knotty Lee of Toronto to coach the Peterborough team in 1935, his work in piloting the Petes to the C.O.B.L. championship in '34 earning him this position again. He will begin Pre-season work in connection with the club shortly and plans to make out another score-card here before the schedule opens. Various matters of minor importance were discussed but left over for the time being, several plans for making this while several plans for making this a banner year locally in senior baseball will be put under way at once. The session then adjourned.

Rangers Safe in 3rd Spot After Remarkable Comback Since Beginning of Year

Win Eight And Tie Three Without a Defeat

TORONTO LOSES

Amerks Win 2-1 But Lost Two Players by Injuries

By The Canadian Press

New York Rangers have cleared the hurdle most everyone thought would be too tough for the team making the most remarkable National Hockey League comeback in years. They defeated Detroit Red Wings 5-3 in New York last night and today were at least temporarily safe in the American division's third spot, five points up on Red Wings.

After winning eight and tying three since the beginning of the year Lester Patrick's crew could have lost last night without retracting much from their great showing. But there was no let down in the play from the rejuvenated New Yorkers and they swept to a comfortable victory over Jack Adams' team.

Their win left them only a point behind Boston in second place, and four behind Chicago, the leaders. Routine last 3-1 to Maroons in Montreal Saturday night and Chicago picked up a 3-2 win from Americans in Chicago. Michigan city last night. Amerks had beaten Leafs 3-1 in Toronto Saturday night and Hawks gave Canadiens a 1-1 tie with Eagles at St. Louis in the fifth game of the week-end.

Maroons Gain

Toronto's defeat and the Maroons win brought the Montrealers nearer the International Division leaders than they have been in weeks. With four games in hand over Leafs Conrad Conny Smythe's team by only nine points now.

The three goal lead built up in the second period and the early part of the third saved Rangers when Red Wings came from behind to tie up the score with three goals in four minutes of the final frame. Then Bert Connolly scored the winning goal and Rangers made things sure with another.

Cecil Dillon, Ott Heller and Bill Cook had scored the earlier New York tallies and Herb Lewis, Wilf Starr and Doug Roche replied in the three quick Wing counters. Nearly 16,000 fans saw the game.

Tiny Thompson performed sensationally in the Boston nets against Maroons but his performance could not save Frank Patrick's team from defeat. After Baldy Northcott scored in the first for Maroons, Dit Clapper tied it up in the second and it was left for Dave Trottier and Hooley Smith, Maroon veterans to break the deadlock edge in the third.

Two Amerks Injured

The win over Toronto was an expensive one for Americans as they lost the services of both "Happy" Emms and Al Murray. Emms is in hospital in Toronto with a broken arm as a result of a skull fracture suffered, when he and Sam Ball collided in the boards Murray was the victim of an unusual accident. A piece of the ankle stick piercing his left leg just above the ankle as he fell.

Obs Heximer and Fred Hergerts, whom Joe Simpson recently brought up from the minors, scored the Americans goals in the first and third periods. Flash Hollett tied up Heximer's goal with a tally in the second.

Third period goals by Lois Couture and Marty Burke gave Black Hawks their win over the crippled Americans, Johnny Gottselig had started the scoring in the first period and Americans had tied it up and gone into the lead on markers by Odie Cleghorn and Heximer in the same frame.

After Bill Cowley gave Eagles a lead in the thrilling game at St. Louis, Leroy Goldsworthy tied it up on a pass from George Hainsworth. St. Louis dalimed was behind the blue line and passed forward to Goldsworthy. Referee Dutch Hiscox ray ruled the play legal. Eight thousand fans saw the first Sunday night game played in St. Louis.

OLYMPICS ARE STILL ON TOP

Win and Lose Over Weekend to Tecs And Cleveland

(By the Canadian Press)

Detroit Olympics tied a game and won a game over the week-end and retained their leadership in the International Hockey League today.

The London Tecumsehs, snapping out of their six game losing streak evened the tables on the Olympics 3-2 at London Saturday night, but Olympics extend things up somewhat by defeating Cleveland Indians 4-3 in Detroit today.

Daley gave Cleveland a two-goal lead in the first period and Detroit evened through Connie King in the second frame and added three more in the third period. In the Saturday game Lorne Duguid put Detroit ahead in the first period but Lerner, Rennie and Eric Pettinger notched three London goals in the middle session to give the Tecs one up, after Anderson scored for Detroit in the third.

Buffalo Bisons shared third place with Syracuse Falcons after they won a 4-3 overtime victory from Syracuse Saturday. Stats scored twice in the first period, Buffalo counted two goals in the second and then added the winning goal in overtime in the third.

The Stars evened things up on Sunday night, thanks to Little Ken Doraty. The little pinch-hitting Regina scrambler got the decisive net late in the third period and helped his club to a 3-2 win over Tecumseh fans from Hourke and Jackson. The final count was 3-2 for Syracuse.

The other match saw first place Windsor Bulldogs and Cleveland. The homesters set down the Bulldogs 5-2 by rapping in four goals in a wild third period. Windsor had a two-goal advantage halfway through the first frame; Les Cunningham made it 2-1 before the period ended and there was no scoring in the second session.

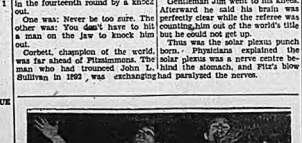
Two morals were drawn by the so-called sports fraternity from the battle March 17, 1897, between Bob Fitzsimmons and Jim Corbett in Carson City, Nev., which Fitz won in the fourteenth round by a knock out.



One was: Never be too sure. The other was: You don't have to hit a man on the jaw to knock him out.

Corbett, champion of the world, was far ahead of Fitzsimmons. The man who had trounced John L. Sullivan in 1892 , was exchanging gay wise-cracks with friends at the ringside when suddenly the Australian caught him with a terrific punch in the region of the stomach.

Gentleman Jim went to his knees. Afterward he said his brain was perfectly clear while the referee was counting,him out of the world's title but he could not get up.

This was the solar plexus punch born. - Physicians explained the solar plexus was a nerve centre behind the stomach, and Fitz's blow paralyzed the nerves.

Frederick Britton Hargrave, 32-year-old sports columnist, of the Toronto Evening Telegram, whose death removes one of the most promising figures in Canadian Journalism. Son of a Presbyterian minister, he was editor of the "Varsity", University of Toronto's highest journalistic honor. It was there he met his future wife, who was the woman's editor of the undergraduate paper. He himself achieved the front pages nationally a few years ago by sharing in a "daily double" at Thorncliffe race track of more than—$2,000, the highest ever recorded up to that time.

Avoca, N.Y., Feb. 4 (CP) — Sitting quietly at her desk doing various things to keep busy, Mrs. Albert Van Amburg relates daily over what is probably the only studentless school in the country.

A week ago Mrs. Van Amburg had three pupils in the little red schoolhouse, located in the town of Pratisburg but they graduated to high school. She has been teaching at the Pratisburg school for the past seven years.

In order to fulfill the terms of her contract, which does not expire until next June, Mrs. Van Amburg arrives at the schoolhouse each day at 9 o'clock. Remains until 4 p.m., and then returns to her home a half mile away.

MARATHON CAT

Some cities have dance marathons, others boast of flagpole sitters, but Edmonton points with pride to her squatting cat. Defying the intimate efforts of the police and fire department, the cat for ten days perched atop the chimney in 35 to 40 below zero weather. When "rescue" squads were sent up to bring the cat down, the animal would jump and evade the would-be helpers, only to take up the perch again when police and firemen departed. Rescue was finally given up in disgust. Forty days later, after a ten-day endurance contest, the cat came down and disappeared.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Unless the weatherman steps in and holds the temperatures to a marked degree, the play-offs in the "big six" intermediate O.H.A. group will commence about Friday of this week. In the meantime the groupleading Petes have a breathing spell to the wall and are endeavoring to hold their slim margin of a lead. This evening the local intermediates are in Peterboro for their regular scheduled group game with the return and final game of the group schedule with Belleville to be played here on Wednesday night. No matter how the decision of tonight's game goes, Wednesday night's tussle is the deciding factor for the final league standing. If the local "Combines" can take the Petes into camp this night, they will move into first place for the group honors. If the Petes split with the locals, however, they (the Petes) will be tied with the Maroons for first place, as it is quite obvious that the Belleville-Peterboro series is the deciding factor in the final standing. By playing this series on Monday and Wednesday in all probability the semi-final play-downs between the second and third teams, will commence on Friday or Sat. with the return game on Monday the 11th, goals to count on the round. The final series will be played on the 13th and 15th, it is expected.

When the Tweed juniors meet Walt Crowe's pets in Napanee tonight it is more than likely that the ultimate winner of the group will finally be decided as the winner will move into sole possession of first place in the group standing. At present the Tweed youngsters are tied with the Napanee kids for first place, both having lost one decision. On the other hand they both have one game left to play in the schedule, each team having a postponed game with the Campbellford juniors. Providing Manager Jay Ferris is willing to forfeit the game, then will the winner of tonight's tussle will annex the group leadership and await the decision of the group semi finals between the second placed club and the Belleville Colts. Convener Thomas announced today that the above arrangement is accepted then the semi-finals in the local junior group would be possible for about Thursday night in either Napanee or Tweed, depending on which town the loser of tonight's tussle. Of course both Napanee and Tweed may demand "their pound of flesh" from Campbellford which would naturally upset the apple cart.

AT THE CAPITOL
"Evensong"
Inside Story of Two World-Famous Songbirds!

Here we have the story of a career woman, one of those ambitious females who thrusts love, marriage, home and children behind her, and with eyes fixed on the goal of fame, dashes forth to conquer the world! In this instance, she does conquer, and then discovers a world bowed in adoration at her feet—she is filled with an unconquerable longing for the things she has tossed aside on her path to the heights. Queen of Song, yes—but oh, for the touch of strong arms enfolded around her, the voice of children calling her Mother!

The role of the triumphant opera singer has fortunately been entrusted to the beautiful and gifted Evelyn Laye—she who created so great an impression with her inspired performance in the main role of Noel Coward's "Bitter Sweet."

Again and again during the length of the picture we hear her glorious tones in one as after another favorite melody or famous aria. Now it is from "La Boheme," now it is from "La Traviata"—or again it is simple Irish folk songs—and all is very good entertainment.

Although Evelyn Laye, in the star role, dominates the picture there are several others whose performances are outstanding. Considering of Conchita Supervia, a coloratura-soprano who is seen in a rival prima-donna, is particularly spirited and colorful; Frits Kortner gives a splendid performance as the hard-driving, practical, unsentimental manager, who keeps his song-bird from her devastating influences as love and domesticity; and Fritz Rasp makes a odd favorite in many tuneful operettas, is glimpsed in a brief role. Emyln Williams, a sincere artist, and Carl Esmond, handsome and romantic, are equally effective. It would be lovers of the prima-donna-star type and those who

"Kid Millions"
Offers Eddie Cantor At His Best.

If there's such a thing as a perfect screen musical, "Kid Millions", Eddie Cantor's new annual extravaganza for Samuel Goldwyn, which came to the Belle Saturday, is it.

The banjo-eyed comedian is funnier than ever as a boy Cinderella of the Brooklyn waterfront who turns out to be the sole heir of Professor Wilson, late Egyptologist who left a fortune in buried treasure in Egypt.

The presence of several other claimants to the fortune makes the story fast, funny and furious. Chief of these is Ethel Merman, as a hard boiled song-plugger posing as the late professor's common-law-wife, and her boresome gangster boy-friend, played by Warren Hymer. Ann Sothern and George Murphy furnish the heart interest.

The fun begins before the boat-load of treasure hunters even embarks and runs high during the crossing when Eddie and Hymer are unsuccessfully to put Eddie out of the way. Arrived in Egypt, Eddie gets mixed up with the Sheik, played by Paul Harvey, and his gorgeous Harem of Goldwyn girls. The sheik's not-quite-bright daughter, Princess Fatima, falls for Eddie and a terrific crush on Eddie and saves him from the boiling oil vats on his promise to wed her. But Eddie wants to get back to his Brooklyn sweetheart and Fanya's jealous fiance, played by Jesse Block, helps him skip with the Goldwyn girls in a plane. Following a crazy flight across the Atlantic, Eddie lands in New York and opens a free ice cream factory for the boys and girls. The finale showing the ice cream being frozen and served, is the highlight and most effective bit-of-color sequence the screen has offered to date.

Lavishly produced, "Kid Millions" offers several gorgeous and tuneful numbers, and the "Mandy" number, in which Irving Berlin's song hit, which Eddie introduced in an early Ziegfeld Follies, is revived is staged in Technicolor. "Okay, Toots", "An Earful of Music", "When My Ship Comes In," and "Your Head On My Shoulder", are other tuneful hits you'll be humming and whistling for months.

"Kid Millions" is a million dollars worth of entertainment, so see it and treat yourself to the greatest fun fest in years.

The Belle Latest News Events of the World, and a very funny comedy, "Hollywood Honeymoon" are on the same program.

Sunday's double program will be repeated again tonight and Tuesday, matinee and evening.

"The Little Minister"

With Katherine Hepburn as the fiery gypsy girl, centre picture of Sir James M. Barrie's most famous romance, "The Little Minister" broadcast to the screen of the Belle Theatre, Wednesday, as the star's proudest contribution toward her record of success. "The Little Minister" definitely tells one of the most absorbing love stories ever filmed but is filled with humor and color. "The Little Minister" is a screen treat.

February 5th in recognition of the commencement of their seventeenth year of service in that church and community.

Does the Hard Winter Sap Your Vitality?

Do You Find Yourself Weak, Draggy, Pepless?

A BLOOD test would probably show that your appetite, vitality, energy and energy-producing haemoglobin has been slimmed down until it is from 10% to 25% or more below normal. Possibly the effects of winter ills linger with you beyond your blood count. This condition, common in Winter and Spring, can be soon made right by treatment with a remedy that is prepared to increase haemoglobin and so build up the blood count. Such a remedy is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which was thoroughly tested at a clinic of 50 people—and, hence, Pink-blooded people hold in a large Canadian city.

What Blood Tests Of 40 People Showed

These 40 men and women were given blood tests before taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and again after taking the remedy for about a month.

Thirty-eight of them showed—a 95% record—showed increases in haemoglobin of from 10% to 25% or in short test period—positive proof of the blood-enriching and revitalizing powers of this world-famous remedy. Every patient's blood count was below normal had it materially increased—positive proof of the power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to aid in forming new red blood cells.

This Authoritative Test Proves the Value of This Remedy For Increasing Strength and Energy

Complete records of this scientific test are on file, and you can submit copies to those persons who want scientific proof of the progress made. But most important to you is the fact that all of these persons greatly increased their vigor, vitality and strength in from four to five weeks. At the end of the test they had the pep that makes life a joy. They had the strength to tackle their work with the vim that gets things done. They had the desire to step out and go places and have a good time. They again know what it was to enjoy health. You can just as surely banish your case of slowed fatigue—just as surely revitalize your blood with new red cells and enrich it with energy-producing haemoglobin—by taking, for a few weeks, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills (so called because coated with pink sugar). Your druggist has this clinically-tested remedy—50 cents a box.

GULLS TAKE FISH AS FAST AS CAUGHT

Fred Bly Captures One But Other Gulls Eat Heartily

In a race between a sea gull and Mr. Fred Bly over the possession of a fish of the morning's catch, the latter won.

Sudden wild whoops and the sight of one of their number coming across the ice and waving his arms frantically, started members of the fishing community on the Bay of Quinte. Glancing up from their labors, they perceived Mr. Bly in full pursuit. Above him, leading by several lengths, flapped a sea gull awkwardly carrying a large perch in its beak. The chase was short and spirited. Evidently weakening under the load, the gull finally released the fish and screamed angry insults at the fishermen. Then it wheeled to join its fellow gulls at the nearest hole.

Scooping the fish from the ice, Mr. Bly arrived back at the hole in time to see the remainder of the fish disappear down the hungry gullets of the swooping gulls. The fish, that had been caught and kept from the cold by snow, freeze until one more daring gull had swooped down, seized the largest and flew away. While gull and man raced across the ice, the remaining gulls breakfasted heartily.

Made tame by the gifts of the fishermen each and sundry, that are caught and thrown for them on the ice, the gulls have now become a pest to the open air fishermen, who daily toil. Waiting the gathering of a crowd around a dump until the fishermen appear, the gulls fly along behind them to the fishing holes and take the fish as fast as caught, unless prevented by man.

FINANCIAL MARKETS
NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

TORONTO MINES

Toronto Feb. 4—(CP)—The mining section was sluggish today as traders held to the sidelines to await a decision on the gold clause. A few of the medium priced gold shares traded in moderate volume at slightly lower quotations while senior golds and base metal and silver shares developed very little action.

Recessions of 75 cents for McIntyre, 25 cents for Lake Shore and 10 to 15 for Wright Hargreaves, Hollinger, Buffalo-Ankerite, Coniagas and Little Long Lac were the main losses for the early part of the session. Bradian was strong and Macassa, God's Lake, Pickle Crow and Siscoe firm.

Despite a higher quotation on metal, the silver shares were mildly soft, Eldorado dropping 10 cents to 1.05.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 4 (CP)—The prospect of another week of waiting for the U.S. court decision on the gold clause appeal was anything but cheering to trade in the industrial section and business was again touching bottom today. Despite the absence of a buying demand holders showed no disposition to get out and the price tone held generally firm.

The influence of the New York Board was mildly bearish and Nickel responded with a loss of 1-4 to 22 3-4 but Brazilian, C.P.R., Ford A. and the leading oil and distillery issues were unchanged to firm. Walker's Common and Industrial Alcohol A. were unchanged and Distillers Seagrams lost 1-4. Food, steel, bank and construction shares were almost dormant and utilities showed some action at slightly higher prices.

Bell Telephone pushed up 3-4 to 134 3-4 and Montreal Power and Power Corporation were higher at early afternoon.

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 4 (AP)—With the expected break in the gold clause clouds failing to appear today, most financial markets settled back for another siesta. Apathy in the equities list was pronounced throughout the greater part of the session. The bonds and foreign exchanges exhibited a disposition to mark time pending the fate of the United States Administration's monetary program. Grains were a bit soft at times and cotton was barely steady.

Among Canadian stocks, Dome and McIntyre eased, while Dominion Stores, International Nickel and Canadian Pacific held virtually even. On the curb, Lake Shore receded slightly. Dominion Government Bonds ruled quiet. Canadian dollars were unchanged at 99.93¾ cents.

The markets were obviously disappointed over the delay in the gold decisions. The opening was also advanced in brokerage quarters the authorities would not consider it necessary to close the stock exchange.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, Feb. 4—(AP)—Extreme dullness marked trading in the stock market today and prices followed an irregular range throughout the apathetic session. Price changes were generally narrow, although J. C. Penney lost 2 points and International Harvester was off 1, Consolidated Gas and Sears Roebuck held small gains. U.S. Steel, American Telephone, Santa Fe and General Motors were slightly lower. The late tone was easy. Transfers approximated 325,000 shares.

Slot Machines are Banned Attorney General Orders

Slot machines and other gambling devices to be found in various places of business throughout this city will not be permitted to operate after tomorrow, and owners and lessees will find themselves deprived of a profitable source of revenue, according to police statements issued today. Provincial police also received instructions of the same nature to be given to all district officers.

Acting upon instructions from the Attorney-General's department in Toronto today, Crown Attorney B. C. Donnan, K.C. issued instructions to the local police that all such slot machines and gambling devices of a similar nature are to discontinue operation immediately. Chief Kidd immediately instructed Plainclothes Officer Izard to convey this information to local vendors of slot machines, etc., with the additional order that these machines would be confiscated if this order was not immediately adhered to.

Stating that this order was provincial-wide and that a general order to discontinue the practice of allowing slot machines to operate in the province had been issued, the local authorities immediately issued the warning, they announced today.

According to a check-up by local police some time ago it was disclosed that there were 25 slot machines in operation in the city. "All of these operators have been told to get these machines off their premises immediately with prosecution and confiscation facing those who fail to adhere to this warning" it was stated this afternoon. According to the general consensus of opinion about the city, this order did not come as a surprise to either the owners of the machines or the general public, who play them.

Some time ago when a rumour was circulated around the city to the effect that a check-up would be made of all slot machines, a large number of operators at that time removed their machines temporarily but subsequently brought them back into circulation after the rumor had quieted down.

COTTAGE OWNER CLAIMS MEISNER SEEN AT CAMP

"Yes."
"Who was one of them?"
"Eh?"
"Who was one of the men you recognized".

Meisner Pointed Out

"Oh, that man there." He pointed towards Meisner.
"David Meisner?" asked German.
"Yes, Meisner," said the farmer.
Brent said he later saw a picture of Meisner in a newspaper and recognized it.
"Did you notify police?"
"No."
"Did you tell anybody?"
"No, I didn't tell nobody".
He said policemen had visited him later with four photographs, two of which he identified as the man he had seen at Bright's Grove.

Meisner in Lineup

Later he had come to London and identified Meisner in a police lineup.
"How many men were in this lineup?"
"I didn't count them".
"About how many?"
"I'd say about seven or eight."
"How were they dressed?"
"In civilian clothes. They were dressed well."
He said perhaps one or two had not been dressed as well as the others.
"Where was Meisner in the lineup?"

"Looked at Me"

"Fourth."
"What impressed this man in your memory?"
"I recognized him at once."
"When you saw him at the picnic?"
"Well he looked at me and then drove away I know they didn't belong to the picnic."
Mr. Bell began cross-examination.
"You had been told to come to the jail to identify David Meisner if you could?"
"Yes."
"Do I understand that this car with the United States licenses was in the grove on the road nearby?"
"In the grove."
He said there was another picnic in another part of the grounds but that the car was nearer the group he was connected with.

Distance From Car

"Did you say the car was 125 feet away when you first saw it?"
"Yes, about 125 feet."
"And what time of day was it?"
"About sundown."
"You say you saw the letter 'H' on the hub of the wheels?"
"It was nearer then, about 12 feet away."
It had come up close to him and about 10 minutes later two men came up together and got in, said Brent.
"Which of these two men got in first?"
"I rather think it was Meisner."

Collector's Evidence

On Aug. 10 he was making collections on Talbot Street, he said, at the end of Talbot Street is the Labatt brewery.
As he was about to enter one of the houses he was canvassing he saw a man walking up and down quickly along the sidewalk.
When he came out of the house he looked for a match but didn't find one.
"I walked across the street where this man was and asked him he had a match. He acted in a nervous manner and said 'Yes, I got one,' and he gave it to me. I said 'he's got a wall eye'."
"You said that to the man?" asked Mr. Justice McFarland.
"No, I says that to myself."
"Do you see him now?"
"Yes."
"Where?"
"That man there looking at me," he replied pointing to Meisner in the prisoner's dock.
Bell asked the collector if he had heard about the $5,000 reward offered for the capture of Labatt's kidnappers. He said he had not.
"Kidnapping has become such a common crime—"

FISCH BROUGHT CARD BOARD BOX

The dark-skinned student testified the car carried Mercer County, New Jersey, license plates.

Such a statement, he added, was made to the police at the time.

Q.—It was not a New York license?
A.—No.

Cannot Identify Accused

Lupica testified he made a statement the car was black or dark blue, a 1929 Dodge sedan. The police, he said, had him pick out a car of similar make.

Q.—Have you at any time told anyone that you recognized Bruno Richard Hauptmann as the man you saw in that car?
A.—No.
Q.—Can you identify Bruno Richard Hauptmann as the man you saw in that car?
A.—I can not.

Defence Counsel Fisher's last question brought out the driver did not resemble Hauptmann and the kidnap ladder was like the one Lupica had seen.

Lupica was released for cross-examination.

Wilentz, with detailed questions, elicited from the witness he only caught a "fleeting" glance of the ladder.

Q.—You said when before the Attorney General, Prosecutor Hauck and a half dozen others the man you saw resembled Hauptmann?
A.—Mr. Hauptmann has a resemblance to the man.
Q.—You've always said so?
A.—Yes.
Q.—And you so testify today?
The witness nodded.

Fleeting Glance

Fisher arose and shouted his question:
"You say you got a fleeting glance at the driver like the witness Hockmuth (old man who told a similar story.)
"We can argue that in summation," Wilentz interjected, objecting to the question.
Q.—Can you identify this man (indicating Hauptmann) as the man you saw?
Wilentz objected but Justice Trenchard allowed answer.
A.—No. I can't.

Hans Kloppenburg, Hauptmann's close personal friend, was the next defence witness sworn. A tall, lean young man with a faint German accent, Kloppenburg was the man Hauptmann said made "moo-sic" with him the ransom payment night of April 2, 1932.

Reilly took him for direct examination.

Kloppenburg told of his residence in the Bronx and occupation as a cabinet maker.

Q.—Do you come from the same part of Germany as Mr. Hauptmann?
A.—No. I come from Schleswig-Holstein.
Q.—Is there a hyphen between Schleswig-Holstein?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Do you recall being at the Hauptmann home the night of April 2, 1932?
A.—Yes.
Q.—What day of the week was it?
A.—It was Saturday night.
Q.—Do you play a musical instrument?

Musical Evening

A.—Yes, mandolin and guitar.
Q.—What instrument did Mr. Hauptmann play?
A.—Mandolin.
Q.—Now what was your custom about these musical evenings?
A.—The first Saturday of each month we would play music at Mr. Hauptmann's home.
Q.—Tell the jury about the night of April 2, 1932?
A.—I got to Mr. Hauptmann's home about 8 o'clock or a quarter of 7. We played some music and cards. Then we had coffee and cake and between 11 and 12 o'clock he drove me in his car to the White Plains subway station.
Q.—Was it in the house the entire evening up to the time he drove you to the subway station?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Who else was there?
A.—No one except Mrs. Hauptmann.
Q.—How many times did you see Fisch at Hauptmann's home?
A.—I don't know. Twenty times. I first met him in July or August, 1932.

Shown photograph, he identified Fisch and Henry Uhlig a friend and associate in business in the Bronx with the little furrier.

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 4—A woman restaurant proprietor testified in the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann today she saw the suicided Violet Sharpe carrying a gray blanket on the evening on which baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., was kidnaped.

Mrs. Anna Bonesteel said the girl came in her restaurant near the ferry at Yonkers, N.Y. which connects with Alpine, N.J., at 7.30 p.m. the night of March 1, 1932.

"She came in. She had a gray blanket on her arm," Mrs. Bonesteel testified. "She said, 'I am waiting for someone.' She kept looking out and opening the door and several times I said, 'Gee she looks like a hen on a hot griddle. Why don't she stop that'."

The court ordered the "hen on the hot griddle" remark stricken from the record.

New 'De-Froster' to Save Victims Of Cold is Regina Doctor's Device

The human "de-froster" in action. Here is William Mundey, Regina, Sask., sub-zero cold victim, who assuredly would have lost both arms and feet by amputation after he was found severely frozen, had not Dr. R. C. Riley (inset) recalled a magazine article explaining a possible method of restoring circulation to affected limbs by means of artificially creating a rarefied atmosphere around the affected parts. Made from make-shift materials, the apparatus the only one of its kind on the continent, is expected to bring Mundey use of his arms and legs again.

By Central Press Canadian

Regina, Sask., Jan. 30—Because Dr. R. C. Riley of this city, of the laboratory division of the General Hospital and former resident of Brantford and Galt, Ont., had a good memory and Dr. R. C. Conn was willing to take a chance, 44-year-old Walter Mundey is likely going to be able to walk and work again after getting his hands and feet frozen in the prairie's recent 40-below-zero weather.

By all the rules and records of past experiences Mundey should have had the limbs amputated after he was rushed to the hospital when he was found lying frozen in the snow here. Amputation has always been necessary in such cases to avoid gangrene.

But back in September Dr. Riley had read a technical article in a medical magazine discussing "Passive Vascular Exercise in the Treatment of Peripheral Circulatory Disease."

It sounds bad to the layman but to the doctor it was just the discovery of a method of aiding patients whose blood refuses to flow in certain portions of the body notably the limbs. It further discussed an apparatus invented by a United States research worker by which the use of the vacuum principle, forced the blood to function in the limbs for aiding patients with arthritis and frostbite.

In other words it was the invention of a "de-froster" for humans.

When Mundey was brought in, frozen and apparently a sure case for the operation table, Dr. Riley propounded his ideas in the subject to Dr. Conn, the attending physician. Dr. Conn was interested and agreeable. But where was such a "de-froster" to be obtained? The apparatus made in the United States would cost about $300 and it would take considerable time to reach the Saskatchewan capital.

Necessity is truly the mother of invention.

Device's "De-Froster"

Within a few hours of the time the doctor gave his consent, Dr. Riley had worked out a sketch of a make-shift "de-froster" utilizing an old suction pump junked a few years ago by the hospital board but saved "just in case" by the young doctor; a flock of rubber tubing some rubber cloth and adhesive tape, and the services of a tinsmith.

The day after Mundey was admitted to the hospital in great pain the laboratory chief was filing his strange contrivance to the patient. Each foot and hand were slipped within the large tin containers made airproof by the rubber cloth and adhesive tape. The rubber tubing was connected to each canister where a special nozzle had been made for it, and then to the old suction pump operated by electricity.

How the suction apparatus was to work was another problem. Mercury tubes are usually made use of but how to devise the tubes?

Completely Successful

It was a poser for the doctor and lunch time came before he could solve it. He hurried home, late. As he was about to sit down to a tasty meal and idea struck him. Barely stopping for hat and coat, he rushed out into the much-below-zero weather and headed for the hospital in a hurry. A few quick tests and the mercury tubes worked! It was the last step. The "de-froster" was put in operation and has been working successfully since.

Mundey says he no longer feels the pain. His doctor says the circulation apparently is commencing once again in the frozen limbs, the vacuum on one foot being offset by the pressure applied on the other, similarly for the hands, the tubes being changed over at regular intervals. Mundey expects to be up and walking in a few weeks.

It is the only apparatus of its kind in Canada—and if you consider what it was made of—the only one in North America.

POLITICAL 'TROOPS' ACUSE ONE ANOTHER

Paris, Feb. 1 (AP)—Leaders of France's rival political "troops" of the Conservatives and Radical extremists accused each other in a stormy session of the Chamber of Deputies today of arming and drilling for civil combat.

The government, however, sidestepped the demands of each and that the other side be "disarmed and disolved." Senator Marcel Regnier asked there be "calm" as the factions talked of plans to commemorate the rioting of last Feb. 6.

Seldom Feels Fear When Famous Flier Husband on Daring Flight

Mrs. "Punch" Dickins Would Prefer Son to Remain Close to Soil However

By LOTTA C. DEMPSEY

Central Press Canadian Writer

Edmonton, Jan. 30—To the admiration and respect the rest of the world has accorded Clennell H. "Punch" Dickins, daring flier of the north, Edmonton, his home, adds a love and affection that is as personal as it is deep.

It is not unnatural, then, that practically every one of the 70,000 citizens of Canada's most northerly city reached a state of desperate and frightened panic when the latest created member of the Order of the British Empire was reported missing for the fourth, fifth and sixth day during his brilliant flights to the shores of the Arctic, in search of the McAlpine party, a few years ago.

That is, practically every citizen but one. She was a charming gracious young mother who answered telephone calls talked to reporters, communicated with flying station after hour, and seemed to give strength and courage to all of those who were gradually losing hope. Further still, she was in a position to know that "Punch" was safe, because she realized most fully his capacity for meeting emergencies, his cool-headed, systematic planning in the face of all conditions and his perfect control of nerves.

She was Mrs. Punch Dickins.

To-day, she admits that perhaps that was one of the most difficult of her many experiences as the pilot's wife, as well as being Punch's own admittedly most thrilling adventure. Yet she knew then, as she knows now, that the man who has gone so much to open up the great north, and whose services in the cause of life and justice and commerce have been inestimable, never takes unnecessary chances, and doesn't fly unless the conditions are right.

Always Has Control

"Good nerves", she says unhesitatingly when asked her opinion of the flier's greatest asset, knowing that the man who has been called The Lindbergh of the North shares the American idol's splendid control and command of himself as well as his machine, in every situation.

Petite, and with the delicate charm of the Barrie heroines she has so ably portrayed on more than one production of the Little Theatre and in university dramatic clubs, Mrs. Dickins is the centre around which Punch's home life and that of their two delightful children, John and Mary, aged six and five, revolve. Although she has enjoyed occasional flights with her husband (including one from New York to Winnipeg, and looks forward to the day when she may join him in a journey north, Mrs. Dickins is infrequently found at the flying field.

The Secret Fear

"Of course, there are times when I wish Punch were a taxi driver," Mrs. Dickins admits smilingly, and for a moment there is a wistful look that hidden fear which is secreted in the hearts of all those women who wait at home for the adventurers of this earth.

Again reluctantly she admits her hope that John will find the still more entrancing than the clouds when he grows to manhood. Yet she does not discourage the golden-haired, brown-eyed little boy who brings her books on aviation and pictures of flyers in technical magazines, and questions incessantly about mechanical devices of all sorts. Both children enjoyed their one brief experience in the air recently tremendously.

A graduate of the University of Alberta, a clever young actress and a charming member of the western city's younger set as the daughter of one of its best-loved clergymen and war-time padres, the late Captain Gerrie, Mrs. Dickins did not know in 1927 when she married "Punch" that he would take up flying as a vocation. But when the opportunity came, and she realized how much it meant to him, she fully agreed. When he is at home for a few days and she sees how restless he is away from his machine, she realizes that it was the only choice.

Most Anxious Moment

Strangely enough, it was on an occasion when Punch was lost for only a relatively short period of time that Mrs. Dickins experienced her greatest anxiety as a flier's wife. In 1928 the young aviator and his wife went to the little settlement of Gold Pines in northern Ontario, from which Punch made two trips daily to a mining district. Living in a big cabin, the young bride waited each day to hear the whir of the engine before putting on lunch and dinner. One noon there was no sound of wings, evening and night passed, and it was not until the next day that a search party discovered the forced landing spot of the flier after they had passed it a dozen times, in a maze of lakes and little islands.

"Such an occasion would mean nothing now . . . but in those days I wasn't accustomed to it," says Mrs. Dickins.

Enjoying keenly the "shop talk" that marks the conversation of flyers whenever they get together, Mrs. Dickins is often the centre of such groups in her role as hostess. She does not in any way share the superstition that marks the wives of so many flyers. Her confidence is built on her faith in Punch's craftsmanship and ability.

In the Dickins home many gifts and tokens bear silent witness to the appreciation of famous and interested individuals. To these is now added the recognition of His Majesty the King.

Yet Punch and Connie Dickins will always be two delightful unassuming people who take a keen interest in the development of their children, meet friends for an occasional game of bridge and skate and play tennis at the nearby club. Today they feel a little, perhaps, as young John did when he came home from school slightly confused and abashed at the paean of praise poured out by an admiring teacher about "Punch" to the first-grade class, and said seriously to his mother, "Mother what is it the government has done to daddy?"

Mrs. Clennell H. "Punch" Dickins is the petite, charming, clever wife of that daring Lindbergh of the north, "Punch" Dickins of Edmonton, Alberta, the recently created member of the Order of the British Empire. She is a delightful hostess, and mother, and has many abilities of her own. She admits that there are times when she wishes "Punch" were a taxi driver.

Swirling Torrents Spread Death And Destruction in Mississippi

Several thousand families have abandoned their homes in the Mississippi valley between Memphis Tenn., and Greenwood, Miss., as icy flood waters have threatened new areas. Many tributaries of the Mississippi, turned into raging torrents by heavy rains, have destroyed lives and property. Photo shows refugees taken out of the flooded area on a railroad hand car. Flood conditions were especially serious in the city and neighborhood of Marks, where the swollen Coldwater river ripped away a levee. British Columbia is likewise suffering from floods.

Spite Wife

by Ann Forester

Vera went with no reluctance. Destiny. And her heart . . . it was the old anything . . . might as well agree her . . .

The door closing behind Vera. The sound of her feet going down the stairs. The little figure in the hall hall, motionless with closed eyes while Vera was in the room but now the grey eyes opened with a snap and Madam spoke vigorously in her thin voice.

"Harpies! I'm so on to them . . . Harpies! I'm on to them . . . Robert was a fool to marry that silly woman. Her children are fools too. Oh!" She turned that sharp grey hate on the girl. "I remember what I wished to tell you. Now head what I say, Judy! I depend on Nicholas. He's on the side my son Nicholas. He's on the side sealing for China. See he'll come back . . . Never forgets his mother bless him. He sent me a shawl. Fine boy . . . a fine boy, my son Nicholas. Judy!"

"Yes, dear!"

"For Nicholas is a fine boy! Adventure . . . always one for adventure, he was. Now Robert, he only cared for his . . . Saints and figures . . . But Nicholas—ah, a fine figure of a lad in his officer's blue. Judy, you must look after Nicholas!"

Judy realized that the bright old mind was clouding. Nick had been swept overboard in her brain with the image of the dead Nicholas.

"Nicholas!" —the shrivelled old face on the pillow swam for a moment in sudden tears while she answered Madame dully.

"I will, Madame. I'll do as you wish."

"Promise me, Judy! You're all I have to leave Nicholas to when I go. These others—they're a pack of fools! But you'll look after my boy Nicholas. His gentle she was at the end of a long day . . . at the end of a long life . . . So lightly the sheet lay over Madame's shrunken chest that Judy felt her heart go cold with fear. Madame caught her breath at longer intervals.

Hours the girls sat there, her mind a floating benumbed thing—now with Nick somewhere over there on the other side of the world, ignorant that this beloved old grandmother was passing on. Nick . . . and she wouldn't be there to comfort him when he learned the news . . . But it would comfort him to know that she had been here at the end. This much she could do for Nick.

Judy's mind touched the earlier scenes of the evening. That hectic party at Sunioe's . . . Had it really been this same evening? Standwalking into the bank . . . and of Willem's brooding face. Danger there . . . but she couldn't make Stan see that. The man loved Vera nice in his possessive fashion. Because Stan was fools to stir his smoldering jealousy like that. But no one could tell Stan anything . . .

Martha came on her felt-soled shoes and slipped a cushion behind Judy's aching back. The woman's face was puffy, her eyes bloodshot from crying . . .

A long interval—Martha and the doctor looking in. That little grey face on the pillow. Martha pulling back the curtains—and Judy saw that day had broken. A saffron streak in the eastern sky.

Then the doctor, was bending over the bed. His eyes strangely solemn. His faint nod, chilling her blood . . . Martha's sudden loud weeping. Madame had gone out with the night.

On the floor below at the head of the stairs, Judy met Stan stumbling up. His wave a borrowed suit, to replace the tuxedo he had worn in the tank. His hair was ruffled, his face white with drink. This Judy saw at the light from the landing window fell upon him.

"Stan . . . your grandmother . . . has died".

Stan nodded himself by the banister. "Well . . . well . . . can't escape the old girl . . . live forever. Maybe a chance to get a little decent now . . . Eh?" Then, resentfully belligerently "Well . . . what you staring at me for? Him? They all get there in the end. Don't look for—What did I do—?"

"Nothing . . ." Judy's voice was very tired. She turned. Wished down the hall to her own room. She locked the door behind her, pushed the windowpanes where daylight was beginning to creep in.

MADAME'S LAST SURPRISE PARTY

CHAPTER XXIII

A week after Madame's death, a strained little group gathered in the library of the Carter house. Mrs. Carter had the reading of the old lady's will.

Old Mr. Parrott, so long the attorney for the family that it seemed like some distant relative, presided at the massive oak table. Mrs. Carter was ensconced in a great high back carved chair, looking even more terrifying and fluttery than usual. Vera was nearby, her mouth tightly pursed together, as though she knew what was coming. Stan was about to hear would not make pleasant listening. Her heavy black brows were knit—she was adding some figures on the back of an envelop and now and then she whispered vehemently to her mother who listened, with round, unprepossessing eyes and nodded unceremoniously.

Stan was sunk in a deep armchair his handsome brown set in a scowl. Stan was in one of his black moods—he had barely acknowledged Mr. Parrott's greeting when he entered. Stan wore golf clothes; he had been out at the country club all day and suspected—was already several drinks ahead of his daily schedule.

Amy was expensively dressed in black crepe, well aware that it was flattering to her blond marcel. She was in perpetual motion, constantly swinging her expensively shod foot, twirling the end of a long chain of brilliants. Amy was a bit nervous, full impatience. Now that Amy had landed the Sumner fortune she was fairly indifferent to any slight sum her grandmother might have left her.

"She'll leave it all to Nick, of course—" she had told Stan fiercely before they arrived that morning. In her high, fretful voice. "That's a foregone conclusion. Leave the rest of us just enough to keep us from fighting the thing and turn the balance over to Nick. She's always been a perfect idiot about Nick. I'm silly for us to go over . . . A waste of time . . . That will is no surprise party, believe me!"

But Amy was wrong . . . Madame gave one last surprise party Madame she was no longer there to chuckle the old attorney cleared his throat sardonically at the various faces as and started to read.

"I—Satira Strowbridge Carter, being of sound mind—" All written out it was, in Madame's firm, clear writing which covered the foolscap pages, Judy thought like a web of fine lace. Legally sound — remarkably clear, and she'd said just a couple of months before her death.

A comfortable fortune invested in sound securities and steady, old-fashioned real estate.

Mrs. Carter — Vera — Amy—Stan each left a thousand dollars "since amply provided for in his estate, so wisely controlled by my beloved grandson, Nicholas." A blanket snub from Stan, a sniff and frown from Vera. Amy's flashing chest slowed—thing suspended motionless from her hand for a moment, then started a more hectic swinging. A complacent smile growing on Amy's face. What was the bequest or a cranky old woman to Mrs. William Sumner, with her white hands plunged deep in the Sumner fortune!

The balance of Madame's estate was to go to that "beloved grandson Nicholas" with a few exceptions. And here began Madame's surprise party. Martha the faithful was provided with a modest income for life. "And the sum of a hundred thousand dollars to be paid directly, without delay or restriction, to Judith Denning Carter, in appreciation of the sunshine she brought into an old woman's life . . ."

The dry precise sound of the lawyer's voice fell on the quiet room like the crackle of fireworks: Judy felt her ears hum—felt her head begin to pound at the amused and outraged faces which were turned on her.

"Judith Denning Carter . . . a hundred thousand dollars . . . why . . . why I . . . was dreamlike! She had stated nothing. Like Amy, she had thought the bulk of the estate would go to Nick. She had hardly cared about coming to this meeting today. Had only attended because as Stan's wife, she was one of the family and it might seem disrespectful to the old lady's memory had she stayed away. But— a hundred thousand dollars.

If Judy was amazed the others were thunderstruck—and outraged. They were resentful of Nick, but Nick, for all they disliked him, belonged to the family. But this upstart— this outsider whom Stan had married . . . why it was insulting! It was unbelievable! The old woman had been under the evil influence brought to bear—a fair judge would never stand for such! ought to sue!

Cold displeasure to Judy's face and indignant meetings behind her back Vera trembled with suppressed rage. Nothing less than an insult it was! Were they to sit quietly and permit the crazy will to stand . . . This girl and Nick were in league: they should be exposed . . . And Amy, jolted out of her complacent pose by jealous grew flushed and shrill. She'd known all along that sly thing was going to slip some-

Little Benny's Note Book

Ma was downtown shopping this afternoon and supper was reddy ony was wasn't home yet, and pop started to wawk up and down and nervis looking at his watch, saying, This is ceasing to be funny, I never knew a woman to be so late as this.

Why, what do you thinks happened? I said, and pop said, I dont think anything's happened, confound it, only the streets are pritty slippery today and your mother never did know the ferst principals of keeping her ballenis on the ice.

Even with skates on? I said, and pop said, I never remember seeing her with skates on, but 999 chances out of a thousand she's not skating on ice.

And he looked at his watch again and said, About after 7, for Pete sake what the douce can be keeping her.

Well O wite, dont worry pop, I said, You always tell ma she's silly to worry about you being late, so why is it any different you worrying about her? I said, and he said, I dont suppose it is, but a cause I'm beginning to understand how she feels when I keep her waiting in the evening. Heave me a cigaret, I'll wate again without telephoning, he said.

And he kept on wawking up and down, looking at his wristwatch, and I said O, O, pop, speeking of telephoning, that reminds me, I mean, that's just what happened.

What, when, what the douce are you talking about? he said, and was she electricly this afternoon. She telefoned and told me to tell you not to wait supper for her, because she was going to stop at Gladdis's house and have supper there. Didn't I tell you not to worry, pop? I said.

Well I'm not going to tell you you mask. I'm just going to prove to you that actions still speek louder than words, even in the language of literature, pop said.

Being the beginning of the rad part.

BRINGING UP FATHER

TARZAN THE UNTAMED

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Slowly Tarzan backed toward the dead horse's side. Reaching down, he grasped its saddle girth and with one hand raised the carcass from the ground. Olga freed herself. Answering Tarzan's question, she said:

"My leg is numb but uninjured. I think I can walk."

"Good," commented the ape-man. "Back slowly behind me. Make no sudden movements." Cautiously they backed toward the bush. A moment the lion stood growling, then followed them.

Tarzan wondered if the beast would come between him and the kill or if it would stop there. If the lion followed them beyond the carcass, it would probably charge. That meant it would get one of them. When Numa reached the dead horse—

—he stopped, as the ape-man thought he might. Tarzan waited a moment to see what the beast would do next, and then, suddenly, he heard the girl give a little gasping cry. Was it a warning of new danger?

SERIOUS DAMAGE IN PICTON FIRE

Apartment of R. Insley Gutted by Sudden Blaze

PICTON —Picton firemen answered two alarms Friday. At eight o'clock in the morning fire broke out in one room of the apartment of Don Poole, over the bakery on Main street. The blaze was soon extinguished, the rug on the floor being badly burned.

At four o'clock in the afternoon a very serious fire caused by overheated stove pipes broke out in the apartment occupied by Ralph Insley in the house on Union street, owned by Sylvester Church. The blaze gained such headway that it was out of control in this apartment, when the firemen arrived. The building at one time was Sullivan's Hotel, and is of frame construction, and of dry old lumber. Furniture and clothing of Mr. Insley was a complete loss. Mrs. James McAlpine and two children occupy the apartment next to Mr. Insley, and their home and furniture were quite badly damaged by fire, smoke and water, as was the apartment occupied by Mrs. McKenzie but to a lesser extent. Mrs. Ralph Insley suffering from shock was removed to P.E.C. Hospital. Mrs. Insley Sr., Mr. Insley and the two Insley children were welcomed into the home of Mrs. F. Keiner for a hot supper and are living with Mr. and Mrs. Mack, neighbours, until they can assemble furniture for a new home. Neighbours and friends are making every effort to help them, in a way that with a small family, is very serious at this time of year. Townspeople turned out in large numbers on Friday afternoon, and aiding the heroic firemen, succeeding in preventing the spread of this fire.

One of the oldest residents of Picton, Mr. Nelson Germain, passed peacefully away at the home of his son-in-law, George Gorman, Union St., on Wednesday January 30th in his ninety-sixth year. This grand old man had only been ill since the Sunday before his death. All his life he enjoyed remarkable health, his family never before remembering him being confined to bed. He was of a very even disposition and never used alcohol or tobacco, and to this his children attributed his longevity. He read without glasses until two months ago, and enjoyed visiting with friends to the last. He was a successful farmer in Greenbush and on his retirement, Since then he has made his home with his son. The funeral service was held at his late residence on Friday afternoon and was largely attended by neighbours and friends. Surviving is his son and a daughter living in Kingston who came to Picton to be with her father before his death.

Napanee C.D.S. was the winner of the annual Employers' Week competition for the second time this year—competing with stores of the same size in the chain. The staff were guests of the company on Thursday evening, when a turkey dinner was enjoyed at a local restaurant, followed by an enjoyable evening spent with cards. Mr. C. King, manager at Picton and formerly manager at Napanee and Mr. D. A. Fournis, were guests of the Napanee store on this pleasant occasion.

Mr. Royal Rand spent Wednesday in Kingston. He found Mr. Charles Rand doing well in hospital there, following a throat operation. He also visited Mr. M. L. Cowan.

Miss Lydia Couch of Picton and Mrs. Edward Hall of Campbellford have the sympathy of friends here, in the sudden death of Mr. Hall, who was a nephew of Miss Couch and often visited here. Mrs. Hall was Miss Florence Babbit of Picton and has many friends here.

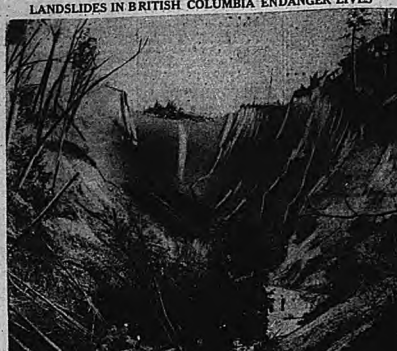
Mr. Frank Minaker is again seriously ill with complications, that have set in, during his convalescence from a recent attack of pneumonia.

Mr. William Caig is very ill with heart trouble at his home Church street.

HAZE PARTIALLY SPOILED ECLIPSE

At Helena, Montana, Eclipse 67 Per Cent of Totality

The moon blanketed a section of the sun Sunday in a partial eclipse, casting a great shadow over North America, but low hanging clouds and haze generally ruined the show for the east, while the west was blessed with better luck.



Clear skies permitted a two-hour view of the heavenly spectacle at Winnipeg, starting from 9:09 p.m. At its peak hour more than half the sun was obliterated. Other parts of the Dominion had a dull and unhampered view.

At Helena, Mont., where conditions were ideal, the rugged top of the great continental divide formed a natural seat for those who trudged up its sides. There, the eclipse was fifty per cent of totality.

Along the Atlantic seaboard, however, and inland to Toronto, in Canada, and Chicago in the United States heavy clouds all but obliterated the moon's journey across the face of the sun.

Astronomers expressed little or no disappointment. A partial eclipse such as that of yesterday is classed as unimportant from a scientific standpoint.

LANDSLIDES IN BRITISH COLUMBIA ENDANGER LIVES

A canyon created at the University of British Columbia by a small stream which swollen by heavy falls of snow and rain, caused erosion which carried away bridges, threatening for a time to destroy many homes. One home can be seen in upper right-hand corner. The gorge is in a precarious situation. Buildings were dismantled by workmen before they collapsed. The canyon is now more than 200 feet deep and 250 feet wide.

Overheard at Ottawa

Henri Bourassa on Chickens:

Chickens come home to roost every time; sometimes it takes four years and sometimes ten years, but they always come back.

Mr. Spotton: "Pretty old chicken."

Mr. Bourassa: "Yes, and sometimes they are the worst."

Premier Bennett is advised what kind of dumping Liberals believe in:

"Conspirator" Duff doesn't want the cart before the horse:

Mr. Duff: What about the consumer?

Mr. Bennett: The consumer? Well, there would not be any consumers if you destroyed every possibility of production. That is the answer.

Veteran Nationalist member (Henri Bourassa) praises both Conservative and Liberal leaders:

When it is suggested all over the country that the Prime Minister is acting in financial association with St. James Street, and that this is only a smoke screen to prevent other parties from bringing in true social reforms, I know it is untrue. I know that the pontiffs in the financial circles of Montreal and elsewhere dread the effective power of R. B. Bennett, if I may be pardoned for naming him, more than that of any other man. . . . The leader of the opposition I have known for a longer time than the Prime Minister. With some of his policies, I have both agreed and disagreed. As to his sincerity in the views which he held long before he was member of the house, when he was the youngest official in the service of this country, I know how sincerely bent he was in bringing about reforms in the social and economic structure of this country.

Prime Minister has read portions of Industry and Humanity":

Mr. Bennett: Years ago I did read part of his book. I cannot say I read it with great care, but I did read it and I congratulate him on his industry. Not for a moment would I decry his industry, but I do say this, that in the realm of actualities and realisms, fine spun theories in books will not accomplish reforms.

Leader of the Opposition asks some pertinent questions:

What good are minimum wages to men who have no work? What good are maximum hours to men who have no work? What does the weakling system mean to people who cannot get work at all?—and it is unlikely to be found where there is very little work. How are old age pensions to be paid if there is no general employment? How are you to take care of the sick if you have insufficient revenues out of which to invest the necessary disbursements? Can you go on developing all these services on borrowed money indefinitely and not have the credit of the nation suffer? Can you carry on any scheme of social legislation unless you have the wherewithal to do so?

J. S. Woodsworth: "I hope no hon. member in this house or any person outside will be deluded into the belief that this program constitutes a reform of capitalism. Capitalism still stands as a menace to the Canadian people and to the world."

Independent from West coast declares unemployed illiterate:

"I have passed through the experience of being idle as a young man, and there was no relief and no dole then. I learned from my own experience and that of my friends how insensibly one can deteriorate in a period of idleness. In six weeks a man becomes a potential hobo, in six months a potential criminal. I say again, let the old man lay off and receive an old age pension. That would be far better and far cheaper than having to keep young fellow of from twenty to thirty years idle in a camp, learning nothing but everything that is bad.

CARRY M'MILLAN APPEAL HIGHER

Supreme Court of Canada to be Asked For Ruling

Edmonton, Feb. 4.—The verdict of the Alberta court of appeal in ruling that Mr. Justice W. C. Ives acted properly when he dismissed a civil court jury's award of damages against J. F. Brownlee apparently hung in the balance today as counsel for Vivian MacMillan and her father, A. D. MacMillan laid plans to carry their appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Appeal of the 19-year-old stenographer was dismissed in a majority award Saturday. The judges divided two against two and the judgment of Chief Justice Harvey upheld the ruling of Mr. Justice Ives in dismissing damage awards totalling $15,000.

The civil suit filed against the former Alberta premier last June alleged seduction. The judge, however, ruled the gist of the action was damages and dismissed the award because there had been no loss of services. The jury awarded the girl $10,000 and her father, co-plaintiff, $5,000.

Neil D. Maclean, K.C., counsel for the MacMillans, indicated the appeal would be carried to the highest court in the Dominion and to the Privy Council if necessary.

Three of the judges, Chief Justice H. Harvey, Mr. Justice T. R. Mitchell and Judge Frank Ford agreed the appeal should be dismissed on the ground there was no proper evidence of damages upon which a jury could rightly enter the verdict. They upheld the judgment of Justice Ives in refusing to award the damages.

Justice A. H. Clarke and Justice Harry Lunney upheld the appeal of Miss MacMillan and placed damages at $10,000 and costs. They dismissed the appeal of the father on the ground there was no evidence to support interference of the girl to serve.

Chief Justice Harvey attached as "incredible" the story told by the girl but Mr. Justice Clarke declared that while the story was a strange one "truth was stranger than fiction". The chief Justice found there had been misdirection of the jury by the trial judge which would have been sufficient to vitiate any verdict. The result would have been only a new trial.

BANK NATIONALIZATION DEFEATED IN HOUSE

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Washington, Feb. 5 (CP)—In a trice, Rep. McCormack (D.-Mass.) has become the commonwealth's hero. He introduced a bill today providing citizens in post offices shall be paid in full for holidays whether they work.

"The amount involved is so small," he said, "that I can see no reason why they should not be treated equally with salaried workers and enjoy the satisfaction of holidays with pay."

Columbia, Tenn., Feb. 5 (CP)—The mule market is back to its 1929 level.

Columbia's market, considered one of the world's largest, yesterday saw 600 mules sold at prices as high as $175 a pair. Fifteen hundred were brought here from as far as 300 miles, jammed downtown streets but hundreds were withdrawn from sale when bidders and sellers failed to agree on a few dollars' difference.

Washington, Feb. 5 (CP)—Senator Gerald P. Nye (R.-N.D.) unwillingly announced today a major victory in his war against the phrase "dole" which has been sprinkled through most recent United States laws. The senate appropriations committee eliminated the six words from the administration's work relief bill.

"A man who doesn't know whether he means 'dole' or not is unfit to write a statute," Glass commented.

"Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 6 (CP)—The dry state of Arkansas today gave official expression to the proposal convict-made liquor be used to solve the bootlegging problem. Governor J. Marion Futrell signed a special act for a state monopoly in distilling, and then handed to him and was "handed" confiscation.

Hamburg, Germany, Feb. 5 (CP)—Dissolution of the city's Provincial Court, estimated today between 180,000 and 200,000 Germans had emigrated since Hitler operations under Nazi laws.

His report showed 30 Reichsmarks 45 per cent. of those startlined were so dealt with because of hostile demonstrations, 20 per cent. because of spill personality, 20 per cent. for religious and 2.5 per cent. for chronic alcoholism.

New York, Feb. 5 (CP)— A dog that returns to its old home may become a trespasser and as more is liable to conviction.

So ruled Justice Redman Richard in a Ridgewood Municipal Court in dismissing a damage action for $2,000 brought by Henry Bogniack, owner of the dog, against a dog warden, Peter Hahn, Mary C. Hahn, and the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

Asta, the dog, felt a hankering for her old home shortly after Bogniack moved away from the Hahn neighborhood, and persisted in loitering about Mrs. Hahn's back yard, barking at passersby.

When Bogniack learned that he was too late, Asta had been destroyed by the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

"The dog was a trespasser," said Justice Richard, "and the woman did the only possible thing."

Washington, Feb. 5 (CP)—The United States government has finished the business of printing paper. It has 350,000 and it doesn't want any more.

The goods were purchased by farm agents in the western drought areas to keep them from starving to death. Twelve-thousand were slaughtered, canned and distributed by the federal administration to destitute families.

A search of the files of the office-in today, Col. Philip G. Murphy said the animals cost $496,377 or 1.40 per cent.

Washington, Feb. 5 (CP)—The House Appropriations Committee learned today the United States had an immigration inspector on the Mexican border whose pride for the admission of foreigners was lost the instant he read the ten commandments.

Thaddeus H. Butler, commissioner of immigration was naturalization, reported the unnamed inspector saying he would debar a divorced person from entry. An examiner pointed out to him such action would not be in accordance with the law.

"That don't make no difference to me by the ten consmandments," the inspector replied, according to MacCormack, who added his department was putting "an end to such conditions."

NATIONALIZATION OF ALL BANKS IN CANADA DEFEATED

Liberals And Conservatives in House Combine Against Motion

SUPPLY FISH BAIT

Support is Given This Motion by All Members

Ottawa, Feb. 5 (CP)—From fish and bank the House of Commons today turns to government business including such matters as farm loans, natural law and unemployment insurance.

On private members' day yesterday the members spent their time debating the merits of national ownership of banks and ways and means of helping the hard-pressed fishermen of the Atlantic coast.

William Irvine (U.P.A., Wetaskiwin) presented a resolution urging nationalization of the Bank of Canada and the chartered banks "as speedily as possible" and saw it defeated by an overwhelming majority.

On the other hand substantial support was offered Hon. Peter Veniot's resolution urging the government to establish small refrigerator plants along the coast line to supply fishermen with bait at reasonable cost.

The banking debate produced many sharp hits between Liberal and U.C.P. members. The latter objected to Liberal attempts to attribute to them responsibility for government ownership of the central bank. They had accepted for the bill of third reading last session, they declared, only because the principle of the privately-owned bank better than none at all.

C.C.F. members in turn questioned the sincerity of the Liberals. Angus MacInnis of Vancouver South said the Liberal party had been advocating a government-owned central bank for fifteen years but had done nothing to establish one during its three years of office.

Mr. Irvine's chief argument was that banking and credit should be considered as a public utility and made to serve the interests of all.

Maj. William P. Lee, one of his companions, gleaned a lacerated left eye and Lieut. Winfred Skelton a cut lip in the brief scuffle that preceded the tragedy.

Taylor of Amherstburg, he is unloading transients upon the latter town, Chief Taylor, according to a newspaper report, charges his brother chief with deliberately sending the transients to Amherstburg.

Chief Babcock in reply, said the men ask where work can be obtained and he advises them, men were wanted on the Livingstone channel.

"If Amherstburg is so hard up the town can't give a man transient a meal and bed, I am sorry," remarked Chief Babcock. "But I thought the Chief of Police would have more humanity than to refuse the unemployed man to, toward unemployed men.

"If it is necessary," he added, "we might provide lunches for transients heading west so they could eat at Amherstburg without financial embarrassment to the town."

Will Rogers at Debut of His Daughter Mary

New York, Feb. 5 (AP)— Will Rogers would call it "ornery" and undoubtedly Broadway witnessed its "ornieriest" first night, when it saw his 19-year-old daughter, Mary, make her New York debut in "On to Fortune."

Ornery, in this case, means something both bewildering and paradoxical.

Mary Rogers, in her role of an ingenue, proves to be a fetching, eager thing. She has several facets which do not seem logical—at least, not to the typical Broadway reporters.

In the first place, Miss Rogers is a serious and pretty young actress. She is father is scarcely serious and perhaps not pretty.

BEVERAGE ROOM WAGE FOUND LOW

Significantly, however, he remarked "we have the privilege of granting authorities as we see fit." Investigations have been in which was the worst offender, Mr. Smith said, Hamilton.

Average wages in beverage rooms run from $15 to $18 a week. Mr. Smith said, but he found one case of a married man receiving only $3 a week.

MEISNER WITH 2 MEN BUYING CHAIN FOR 'SAVAGE DOG'

Hardware Merchant Says Meisner One of Three in Store

CARPENTER IDENTIFIES

Albert Cruse Says He Spoke to Meisner at Camp

London, Ont., Feb. 5 (CP)— George Bannister, hardware witness in the trial of David Meisner, charged with kidnapping John S. Labatt, today identified Meisner as one of three men who bought a chain saw at his store from him last August.

Labatt, who was in the witness box for more than a full court session, had related his experience and said he was chained to a bed in a cottage hideout in the Muskoka district. Bannister is a hardware merchant in Port Carling, in the Muskoka area.

Bannister's evidence followed that of Mathias Harrison, a carpenter, who identified Meisner as a man he met near the cottage last Aug. 15, the day after Labatt was abducted.

Albert Cruse identified Meisner as one of three men he met near the cottage next to his at Leonard Lake from last Aug. 13 to Aug. 15.

Cruse said he spoke to Meisner on one occasion. He thought it peculiar that the three men had kept in their city clothes and had not gone swimming or fishing during their stay in the Prowse cottage. They had come to him on Aug. 15, and asked him: "Where do you get your spring water here?" Cruse said he went him to the spring and told him how to draw the water. Meisner, he said, seemed anxious to hurry away, he said.

He did not see either of the three men after Thursday, he said, he said.

The man who had asked for the chain was not Meisner, he was the largest man of the three, said Bannister. Meisner did not speak in the store, the largest man doing all the talking.

The large man had taken up a chain and said: "Is this a good chain" "will it do the work?" Bannister had said it would.

"The large man did not say much it was," Bannister related, "and I said it cents. I asked him if he wanted it wrapped up but he said no and walked out with the chain in his left hand.

London, Ont., Feb. 5 (CP)— Mathias Harrison, carpenter, today identified David Meisner as a man seen near the Muskoka hideout of John S. Labatt, brewer kidnapped by the abduction last August.

Harrison, first witness with the kidnapping, heard Harrison testify that he met Meisner and companions on the cottage on Aug. 15, the day after Labatt was taken from his car near Toronto.

The cottage was owned by Horace Prowse, Toronto lawyer, Harrison said it "queer" for a stranger to be on the cottage property. Meisner asked he thought the camp was unoccupied.

Crown To Close Case.

The crown expected to rest its case this afternoon, Harrison said.

E. J. Lee, part owner of a camp in the Muskoka district, testified that the Prowse cottage, returned to the stand for cross examination as the trial resumed, identified Meisner as identified Meisner, a former Canadian living in Detroit as one of the two men who discussed renting his cottage four days before the kidnapping.

When they had discussed rental Lee and Meisner and his companion left, saying they were also considering a site on Lake Joseph.

Howard Cluff, K.C., resumed cross examination of Lee, up to the points.

"When you went to Detroit with four other witnesses and two officers did you discuss what you were going to say?

"No."

"Now, what did the officers tell you you were going to Detroit for?"

Lee said he had been told to go with the police to Detroit to see some one in connection with the case.

"Was there any discussion between you and the police as to how you were going to identify?"

"No, we didn't have been but I don't remember."

Photographs Shown.

He had been shown photographs in Detroit from which one of Meisner had been identified.

"Were your expenses paid both ways on this trip?"

"After a lot of bargaining."

"Were your expenses paid both ways on this trip?"

"Yes, finally."

Inspector E. D. L. Hammond testified he showed Lee photographs

DIONNES ARRIVE FOR LONG VISIT

Callander Couple Marvel at The Sights in Chicago

Chicago, Feb. 5 (AP)—Flashing delighted grins to their welcoming party, Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne, parents of the quintuplets, completed their trip from Callander, Ontario, at 9.10 a.m. C.S.T. today.

The welcomers, sent by Mayor Edward Kelly, greeted the couple with a bouquet. Evidently prepared for a decided change in the living cabin of her Canadian home, Mrs. Dionne topped her ensemble of brown fur with a chic green hat. A fresh fall of snow, however, had restored the winter scene to Chicago.

The mother of the world's most talked-about babies looked about happily at her first glimpse of an American city and chatted in the French with members of her party. Mrs. Joseph Rochette of Callander, Ont., and her father, Leon Dionne, brother of Dr. Dafoe, Leo Kervin, the couple's advisor.

Buildings Close

The flowers were from one famous mother to another. They bore the inscription: "Welcome to the United States, Mother Ernestine Schumann-Heink."

The tall buildings on Michigan Avenue fascinated Mrs. Dionne.

"C'est magnifique," she exclaimed in French.

With this in view the defense put on the stand Mrs. Bertha Hohn who testified she was visited one night in November 1933, by Fisch and a farmer named Budreau who lived at Greenwich, N.J., 20 miles from the Lindbergh estate.

Edward J. Reilly, defence chief counsel, flashed a letter during the record testimony Fisch carried bundles, at his home in Greenwich.

During the day if I can get my witnesses here from New York I hope to prove Isador Fisch was the man who jumped over the cemetery fence, and delivered the money from Dr. Condon."

Cocky Song Writer

Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon testified for the state Hauptmann passed over a cemetery fence to meet him and that he subsequently paid to Hauptmann the $50,000 Lindbergh ransom.

The courtroom tittered constantly as Attorney General Wilentz produced Moses, a cocky little, witness.

The Attorney General drew from the witness he had been hoaxed into making a "radio broadcast" from Station WOR, Newark, and imprisoned sheepishly as he admitted his talk was free broadcasting.

Q. Have you written a song about the trial?

A. No. I have written a song about the unemployed—a beer song.

Col. Lindbergh, during the general amusement attending Moses' testimony.

Moses was excused after he said, receipts for his expenses in Flemington, were lost in the mail department by the defence.

Mrs. Anne Morrow, mother of Mrs. Hauptmann was the next witness sworn.

Niece Gives Alibi

On the afternoon of Nov. 26, 1933, she testified, she went to the defendant's home. She found Mrs. Hauptmann alone. Hauptmann arrived at 4 p.m. and left after Fisch and Paul Wittrie came in.

Q. From the time Hauptmann came in until he went out at 10 p.m. to take Anne home did he leave the child?

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 5.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's defence lost three legal skirmishes today.

The court ruled out an effort by the defence to show Fisch visited a Lehigh Valley inn in 1933 at Hewitt, Long Island, hearing certain packages.

The court also denied Hauptmann's request to call, as defence witnesses, which would have required checking of telephone records, to produce the releases he gave to newspapers during the Lindbergh kidnapping investigation and ruled out the testimony of a theatre patron who visited the defence intended to attack the memory of the state witness who said Hauptmann passed a ransom bill on Nov. 26, 1933.

Miss Ethel Mae Fredericks, secretary at least, a Mr. E. Seymour, it might attack the mental condition of Dr. John F. (Jafsie) Condon, Lindbergh intermediary, who testified he paid Hauptmann the ransom money in a Bronx graveyard on the night of April 2, 1932.

BETTER LIGHTING ON CITY STREETS MERCHANTS' HOPE

Commissioner G. A. Reid And Manager Scott Speak on Lighting

RESOLUTION PASSED

Trade Group Aims Upheld by Merchants at Monthly Meeting

Better street lighting was the principal item of discussion before the monthly meeting of the Retail Merchants Association of Belleville Monday evening in Dickens' Coffee Shop. Other matters discussed included early closing bylaws for the various lines of business in the city, a proposed by-law to regulate the selling of meat on the public market and other matters of interest to Belleville business men.

There was a large attendance with President John McIntosh in the chair, assisted by Vice-President R. J. Wray, and Secretary W. J. Doyle. Guests of the evening were Mayor Wallace Ponsford, representing the local Hydro Commission, and O. H. Scott, manager of the local Hydro system.

The question of leaving up the trees used for Dominion Day decoration, making this installation permanent, and using them from time to time throughout the year as occasion demanded, also extending the area of the special decoration and running them zig-zag across the streets, was suggested and an opinion asked from the Hydro officials present as to the feasibility of the installation. It is understood the future and would deteriorate rapidly if left to fasten. It would not be feasible to leave the wires up and Mr. Scott said the Hydro officials did not stand the extra strain of an installation which zig-zagged across the streets. Other suggestions as made were carried out, there would have to be no affixing attached to the buildings and the insurance underwriters would object to that, and it would probably mean an increase in rates.

Better Window Lighting

The question of better lighting of store windows came up and Mr. Scott pointed out how brighter and better window lighting could be secured with an increased expense, producing a much more attractive display and increasing goods for merchants.

Mr. Scott demonstrated an ingenious instrument, small enough to hold in the hand, a meter which measured the lighting in any room or store as it was and as it should be for perfect lighting.

Better Street Lighting

Ex-Mayor George Reid, Hydro Commissioner, spoke of the meeting that when Mayor, a gentlemen's agreement had been made in regard to street lighting, that whatever proportion of the profits accruing from street lighting should be paid to the city the same should be spent on improving the improved street lighting. Lighting is provided the city and all public utilities

CITY'S BUILDERS GIVEN PRAISE

Rotary Hears Citizenship Address Given By Mr. J. O. Herity

Community Service was the theme of Belleville Rotary at the weekly meeting this morning, with Jack McFee in charge. After explaining the scope and purpose of the work of the Community Service committee, Mr. McFee called on J. O. Herity for a talk on better citizenship.

Belleville from the day it was incorporated as a city in 1878 with 10,000 population, was traveled by the speaker. The years when the pessimists seemed to be in the majority and the city made progress backward, losing population and prestige. The time came when a decided change occurred and young and vigorous optimists took an interest in city affairs and progress was made forward with results plain to everybody. Various builders of Belleville who had contributed materially to the city's prosperity were mentioned and the industrial growth of the city briefly sketched with credit to those who had helped to make it so. In the days of pessimism when Belleville was losing even that which she had, various industrial concerns were lost to the city because no one was interested in the city's progress and no one believed it had any future. It was estimated that if the opportunities of Belleville had been fully taken care of in the years of pessimism the city would have a population of fifty thousand today. However, a different and more progressive spirit dominates the city today and progress and prosperity beacon lights were shining on all sides.

LIFE OF DICKENS TOLD BY SPEAKER

Y's Men Celebrate The Anniversary of Great Story Teller

Concurring with the weekly biographies recently introduced at the local Y's Men's Club, the life history of Charles Dickens was related by Y'man Jount F. Miller last evening at the Y.M.C.A. Dickens' birthday being celebrated this week.

In his short but interesting synopsis, the speaker referred to the many hardships experienced by Dickens in his early life, when he laboured as an apprentice in a blacking concern. "Dickens, the greatest story teller England ever had, of the poor, launched on that literary career after a successful apprenticeship as a reporter, related the speaker.

"David Copperfield", perhaps Dickens' greatest work, was inspirited by personal experiences, drawn from his life as a youth. Other famous books written by Dickens include his fellow-men's sufferings of human understanding, trials and tribulations were "Bleak House," "Oliver Twist", "Great Expectations", "Pickwick Papers" and "Nicholas Nickelby".

"Undoubtedly this great writer was fashionably known and admired to be excessively sentimental," stated the speaker as he referred to the sudden death from a stroke in 1870, Charles Dickens' body lies in the Poets' Corner of venerable Westminster Abbey, with the plain inscription "Charles Dickens".

President Alex Weir occupied the chair and the usual routine of business was discussed, Y'man Newton Thompson, giving a short talk on "Y's Men's International".

Good Luck Kinsmen

Tonight a group of young Belleville citizens, active in business life, will face the public as a community service organization —Belleville Kinsmen, banded together for better fellowship and better community.

Belleville Kinsmen have undertaken the work of helping the children of Belleville become better citizens by providing an eye clinic—better sight, better citizens.

Tonight the Kinsmen present "Showboat Days", a merry musical entertainment, for the approval of their friends and to raise funds for community service projects.

The young men comprising the Kinsmen Club, assisted by a number of young ladies, have worked hard to make this entertainment as pleasing as possible, they have given their time unsparingly, with rehearsals every night for weeks, their talents and their means, to make this a outstanding success.

Every citizen has some responsibility in community service, and the easiest part is to buy tickets for an entertainment such as "Showboat Days" and sit comfortably and watch the performance, knowing that the money would be used to advantage in helping future citizens to better eyesight.

The Kinsmen have done their part, the hard part—the easy part is to sit comfortably and enjoy the performance. The Kinsmen have done the hard part, it is up to Mr. and Mrs. Average Citizen to do the easy part and encourage the Kinsmen by their presence and support.

Motion to Cancel Deputations At Council Committee Meetings Referred Back by Members

Majority Agree Same Work Can Be Done in Committee

LITTLE BUSINESS

Fire Chief Given Salary of $1,800 Year From February 1st

For the time being at least deputations will be received by the City Council at their regular meeting on Thursday night but in the main many will be heard at the regular meeting of the council was the decision, upon a recommendation first fostered by Alderman T. H. Marshall "that no deputations be heard at committee meetings in turned back to the committee for further consideration on request." Mayor George O. Tice. Aldermen Marshall, Hayes, Barlow and Chaning supported the motion of recommendation.

Mayor Tice stated he was not at committee meeting, being in Toronto on city business, but he did not think the suggestion a good one. "We have had the trouble before and I was not pleased at the business that is transacted in the committee room. It is inconvenient when it is made inconvenient for business men from out of the city to come on Monday night and there are times when Aldermen with to give calm deliberation to matters brought up instead of snap judgments. that so often occurs when a matter is sprung on a busy conflict meetings. I do not think the council will abuse the privileges they enjoy and I am for turning this matter back".

Alderman Marshall —"I fostered the motion and I am of the same opinion, that too much time is wasted on Thursday night with deputations. The council chamber is where residents wishing to interview the council should be heard. Alderman Hall—"This system has been passed every year and broken after two or three meetings. There should not be a strict line as suggested in the motion and I am against it.

Alderman Foley—"I was for the motion but after the explanation given by the Mayor I do not think it will support it."

Alderman McCreary — "There are matters sometimes, that need adjusting and can be better done in committee. There is nothing to hide in the discussions and there is justification in receiving deputations in committee and I am against the motion. I think the council can use good judgment in the matter". The motion was then referred back by a majority vote.

Grant for Advertising

The City Council granted the Thomas Skinner and Company $250 for advertising purposes in Canada Weekly, $150 to be paid by the City of Belleville and $100 to be taken off the appropriation given to the Chamber of Commerce each year. There was no discussion on the motion as given to the council. Alderman Marshall, chairman of Market and City Property introduced a recommendation, that Walter Morris, caretaker at St. Agnes' Manor be paid $80.00 monthly, which was passed and also a motion, that certain repairs be made at 91 Camiffton Road, in a house owned by the city. The tender of the Schuster Company for thirty tons of coke at $6.95 per ton was accepted. Mac Lynch will be paid $75.00 a month as assistant caretaker according to a recommendation passed.

Fire Chief Lynch appeared before council with respect to his salary and a motion was passed setting the salary at $1,800.00 per year as from the first of February. There was no discussion given to this recommendation. Aldermen McCreary, Thompson, Wills and the City Treasurer were appointed as a committee to examine all fire and liability insurance of the city and proposition same to the various companies that would also to make a report to the council with recommendations they see fit. The Ontario Horse Gas Company was given until March 1st to make a settlement with the city in the amount due from that company to the Corporation.

Under the head of enquiries, Alderman Thompson asked if there had been a platform on the City Oiler when it was purchased and received a negative answer, Alderman Safe asked if something could not be done to relieve the city of the cost of relief, when delinquent municipalities received one hundred per cent. in relief costs and Mayor Tice explained there was a movement on foot to ask the two governments to assume the whole cost of relief. There being no business and no business before council adjourned. Every member of the council was present.

844,946,600 GALS. OF WATER USED

Belleville still maintains its lead as the city with the lowest water rate and the one in which the largest amount of water is consumed by its residents per head of the population.

According to figures just completed by the local waterworks department, during the year 1934, the astounding total of 844,946,600 gallons of water found its way through the local system to household taps and services from the busy turbines at the pumping station. The per capita consumption thus works out at slightly in excess of 160 gallons per day, a figure which would do credit to a city just twice its size. In spite of the fact that hundreds of taps are left running through the cold months, January last year, one of the coldest years in local record, was a "low" month for water consumption. With a total of 57,912,000 gallons pumped 16 was the lowest month of the year, May, with a total of 72,316,000 gallons was the high month. Lawn services and similar amateur gardening seems to be responsible for this heavy increase during the month. The consumption, however, is not quite clear to officials of the department.

High Average

The average daily consumption last year was computed at 2,314,920, a healthy gallonage for even a large city. This average is based on the borough's total of 2,052,000 for January, 1935. The average daily consumption, however, which was registered on February 28th, last year, was given as 2,824,000 gallons. The lowest daily consumption on January 9, when only 1,564,000 were pumped.

During the year a total of 35,577,600 gallons of water were used to flush the sediment from the filter beds. The 72,316,000 gallons of the beds occurred just 1.574 times and was increased through the fact that conditions during the early part of the ter was found in the water during the summer.

Although you did not taste it, 1185 pounds of alum were used to precipitate the impurities and put it up. A total of 6,299 pounds of chlorine was used to purify the supply by automatic machinery in the pumping station as the alum, discouraged any attempt on the part of talent germs to multiply. These chemicals are tasteless because of a total of one million gallons only or 7 1-4 pounds of chlorine are used. The alum is used at the rate of 1 1-2 grains per gallon.

The year 1934 was a heavy one in the department when contrasted with the year before. In 1933 a total of only 650,945,000 gallons of water were needed. Per capita consumption during 1933 was also figured at 124 gallons per day. The highest day's consumption was 1,788,000 and the lowest 1,188,000 gallons.

HIGHWAY WORK TAKES ALL AVAILABLE WORKERS

Pulp Trade, Will Suffer Says W. N. Gilroy

Highway work in Hastings County may result in a shortage of workers in the pulpwood trade and other lumbering operations, in the opinion of W. N. Gilroy, former Reeve of Con Hill.

In a brief interview with Canada last evening Mr. Gilroy states that his company is not operating as heavily in the bush this winter as last year. The chief reason for the slump held up the work a little but it is hoped that as soon as work in was an advantage in making roads and also improving conditions for bush work.

Very little pulp wood is being cut in this section, Mr. Gilroy reported as saying. There has been some increase in the price of wood, but he is of the opinion that the working class would rather hover around highway construction than go into the bush and cut pulpwood at present prices, although there are much better than they were a year ago.

"I am" adds Mr. Gilroy "strongly of the view that if the government continues taking men off roads, wages at 25 cents per hour, there will be quite a shortage of pulpwood and also some shortage of lumber, in the near future."

Police News

Only eight tran:ients stopped in Belleville last night to apply for a night's lodging at the police station. The continued cold weather experienced this winter stretched somewhat to the falling off of transients appearing in the city thus far this season.

G. M. Hill, Catherine St, reported an accident to the police yesterday implicating his own automobile. On Sunday night Mr. Hill was driving down Victoria Ave. and when about to turn southward on Pinnacle St. struck Mrs. Jane Middleton, 94 East Moira St., knocking her down. Mr. Hill stopped his motor car within a distance of four feet and rendered what assistance necessary, taking Mrs. Middleton to a nearby physician for examination. Only a slight shoulder injury was reported.

Continued complaints have been received from a downtown hotel regarding trucks and transports causing nightly disturbances by passing, backing and racing their motors. The police investigated such a complaint last night and warned the truck operators that such proceedings must cease, as it is fast becoming a general nuisance and public disturbance.

Not a single arrest was necessary in the city during the past 24 hours.

DEBT ADJUSTMENT IS NEEDED SAYS PREMIER HEPBURN

No Basis For Anxiety Regarding Municipal Bonds

MAINTAIN CREDIT

Some Municipalities Overbonded And Must Be Adjusted

Toronto, Feb. 5 (CP)—Defaulting Ontario municipalities who have been ordered by the provincial government to pay three per cent interest on their bonds this year and those municipalities in default on principal today had the intimation from Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn the government took this action because it desired to reorganize their debt structure.

"Adjustment of debt is all we are trying to do," the Premier said in a lengthy statement last night, "and what else can we do?"

He drew a parallel between reorganization in private enterprise and that of a municipality and stressed reorganization by a municipality does not mean repudiation any more than does such a policy in a private company.

Mr. Hepburn denied there was any basis for anxiety as to the governments intentions regarding municipal bonds and said he could not help it if persons who have floated and dealt in such securities were slow to realize certain municipalities are overbonded, in no position to meet their obligations, if something must be done to straighten them out.

The government, he declared, realizes the Province's responsibilities is to maintain the credit of the province and its municipalities, and no one, he believed, is more aware of the situation in these municipalities than David A. Croll, Provincial Minister of Welfare and Municipal Affairs.

(Two weeks ago Mr. Croll announced the new governmental policy towards defaulting municipalities. At that time he forecast refinancing of their obligations before 1936.)

Noting Mr. Croll has been Mayor of Windsor, one city that had to default, Mr. Hepburn declared "all he is trying to do and the government is trying to do is to reorganize the bonds structure so that a solution of it can be met."

The Premier regretted certain municipal debts required adjustment and said the object of the government "is to see that which has happened in the past does not occur again."

He also emphasized the Ontario municipal board will put an end to the belief among some people that municipalities which "go broke" can default, will be permitted to do so.

the people rather than to make profits for a few.

Finance Minister Opposed.

Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance, opposed the Irvine motion. He said the united west had added hundreds of millions of dollars to the debt of Canada if it were counted banking, even if he did not take the buildings and the capital structures.

The finance minister referred to safeguards imposed on banks in the Bank Act incorporated such as no voting by proxies or no shares being held by bank bankers. Every care had been taken when drafting the legislation to safeguard the public against exploitation and to see the bank served the people in the best possible way, he said.

If banks were socialized, government would control banking principles and eventually smash them, predicted Mr. Rhodes. What, for instance, would happen if a government, facing a general election, had to choose between the good of the country or its political fate?

"Democracy," said the finance minister, "are composed of men and they are not perfect. They have never was and there never will be a perfect government in this or any other country.

The major interests of the country would suffer when a choke had to be made between a government's existence and the country's welfare good, said Mr. Rhodes.

Hon. W. E. Raney (Lib., Waterloo North) said the Liberal party favored the nationalization of banks but he personally was opposed to nationalization of the chartered banks.

The Liberals advocated a publicly owned central bank last year and were still in favor of it, said Mr. Euler. He did not think the banking powers should be given to a private company as had been given to the Bank of Canada. It was unfair any government would discharge its duties in connection with a bank organization and credit policy regardless of political considerations.

Resented Suggestion

"I want to put myself on record" said Mr. Euler "as resenting the suggestions of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister that Liberalism to which all did ample justice.

A BARBER WHO HAD RHEUMATISM

Tells How He Carried On

A barber who had been "a martyr to rheumatism" for years, writes: "I have been a martyr to rheumatism for years, and during the five years I was so affected that it was with the greatest difficulty I was able to carry on my business. I may say I am a barber by trade. After having tried numerous remedies, I was finally advised to try Kruschen. I am pleased to say that after having used Kruschen for three months, I am now free from aches and pains than I have been for some ten years. In fact, I consider I am rid of rheumatism, thanks to Kruschen Salts."—W. J. Tout.

Two of the ingredients of Kruschen Salts are the most effectual solvents of uric acid known to medical science. They swiftly dull the sharp edges of the painful crystals, then convert them into a harmless solution. Other ingredients of these Salts have a stimulating effect upon the kidneys, and assist them to expel the dissolved uric particles through the natural channel.

Three fishermen of Bronte, Ont., jiny ing in command of Captain Wilkes, were marooned in the ice of Lake Ontario last week-end when the ice floe in which they were fishing broke away. The men spent 36 hours in their fishing boat were rescued in the ice jam but are none the worse for their experience. From their perilous position by fish- from their experience.

With the present Gran Chaco dispute entering its seventh year of bloody warfare, no settlement seems to continue, to push back the demoralized Bolivian armies toward Bolivia's capital, Sucre. Back of the long struggle which has sapped the strength of the two belligerents, observers say, is disputed possession of tionalization of the banking system instead of such reform as unemployment insurance. What the country needed was "real, fundamental reforms".

Mr. Woodsworth said he hoped Mr. Euler spoke for the Liberal party. The people were in doubt as to where the Liberals stood on the central bank question. Liberals in Alberta and British Columbia were misrepresenting the stand of the Farmer-Labor group in the House and accusing it of opposing nationalization which was true he had voted for the bill last session, said Mr. Woodsworth, but that was only because it was a step in the right direction.

The first steps taken by the Bank of Canada did not create grounds for confidence in the future, continued Mr. Woodsworth. The board of directors, as constituted, is entirely in the hands of the Chamber of Commerce and the bank is a Chamber of Commerce bank. Therefore it could see slight hope the bank would ever be the general public in the future largely because it was a private corporation.

Fishing Industry Helped

"Through interlocking directorates," said the C.C.F. leader, "we have the possibility of a small group of people, 20 perhaps, dictating what direction the credits of this country shall go."

Mr. Venier, member for Gloucester and former postmaster-general, claimed the government was doing a lot to assist farming and other industries but little for fishing. Nothing is done for the establishment of bait storage warehouses at central points along the coast. This would eliminate one of the biggest difficulties of the fishermen.

Maritime members, both Conservative and Liberal were all in favor of the idea although most of them had ideas of other things which might be done as well.

George McDade (Cons. Northumberland) thought the government should launch an educational campaign to encourage the formation of fishermen's co-operative organizations with a view to taking advantage of the provisions of the Natural Products Marketing Act.

Finlay MacDonald (Cons. Cape Breton South) said a fund should be established to assist fishermen by the purchase of equipment and J. H. Myers (Cons. Queen's) thought fishermen should be brought under the provisions of the proposed Unemployment Insurance Act if not now at some future date, when the scheme had been tested out.

Minister of Fisheries Grote Stirling expressed sympathy with the proposal and moved that it be referred to the Fisheries committee. Mr. Venier will speak again, when the motion is next called.

City Butchers Present Petition Against Cutting Meat on Mart

Council Deals With Matter by Resolution

Augmented by a large deputation from the Retail Merchants Association and other interested citizens, the butchers of the city presented a lengthy petition to the City Council last night at their regular meeting and at the conclusion a recommendation was passed that the city solicitor be instructed to prepare a by-law preventing the selling of fresh meat on the market." Mr. D. A. Livesey presented a petition, on behalf of the members of the council and Retail Merchants group, asking for the bakers of the city stated that they had been allowed to sell the relief recipients was coming from Napanee and Trenton and Mayor Ketcheson stated the matter that this matter was being attended to and a resolution would come down at the next meeting of the council. Laurie Lewis spoke for the butchers stating that they had a square deal and that they had a considerable investment in their shops in the city and should be given some protection. The petition as presented was—

Gentlemen,—

The following petition, dealing with the unfair competition now existing between the Butchers Section of the Belleville Branch of the Retail Merchants Association of Canada and the tradesmen from outside centres who are renting up space in the city market, is respectfully presented for your consideration.

1. There are 21 retail butcher shops in Belleville.

2. These shops provide work for 78 people.

3. Fifty-seven of these employees are single and thirty-one are married and supporting a home.

4. The rental of 21 butcher shops pays

(a) Rent of Taxes
(b) Water rates
(c) Hydro bills
(d) Buys its meat from a local dealer
(e) and in other ways contributes towards the success of our city.

All this is in addition to supplying work for 57 employees in the meat packing industry of the shop.

5. We are required to keep our shops in a sanitary condition for 12 months of the year and at all times our premises must pass the inspection of the local government inspector.

6. There is an ever increasing number of tradesmen coming to our local market to sell meat in direct competition to the Belleville butchers. This competition we consider unfair to the city and to the best interests of the citizens of Belleville, as about two or three of the butchers of the city be forced out of business, due to this unfair competition, the loss of the business tax alone would be a serious matter to the taxes paid by these tradesmen.

7. It is our contention that these tradesmen are the producers of Ontario farm products, but are contributing nothing to the city to sell in direct competition to Belleville merchants. We contend that these tradesmen are "Transient Traders" as understood in the by-law passed by the city council of the City of Belleville on July 12th, 1908, and should be subject to the rules and regulations stipulated in the above mentioned by-law.

8. The Belleville branch of the Retail Merchants Association has made enquiries from other centres similar to Belleville and has found that there is a by-law in most centres that protects the local merchants from unfair competition.

9. In our opinion, the By-law in force in the City of Kingston is a worth consideration, as it gives protection to the citizens of that location as well as the local merchants.

A copy of this By-law is attached to this petition and we respectfully request your Worships to consider this By-law and to pass a similar one in the best interests of the citizens and local merchants of the City of Belleville."

D. A. LIVESEY,
Butchers' Representative on the Executive of the Belleville Branch of the Retail Merchants' Association of Canada.

MUSIC-LOVERS SHOULD BE PROUD

Belleville music-lovers have demonstrated their loyalty to their art by the enthusiasm with which they have entered into the organization of the local branch of the Canadian Concert Association. Five hundred and two memberships sold in six days is the record of which this city must be proud. It shows that love of the art is very real.

Under the system of the association the series of concerts will be open only to subscribers. The programs will be presented without further obligation on the part of those who have purchased two dollar memberships and the system assures that no further financial responsibility has to be assumed by anyone or any club.

The undertaking is a real community co-operative effort of a kind which will undoubtedly bear the finest results in years to come.

Its importance to the cultural life of the city cannot be overestimated.

TELEVISION IN BRITAIN

Britain has found television so far advanced that she has decided to make of it a public service.

Hats off to the Old Land which has not forgotten the way of pioneering!

It looks as if it will be a considerable time in the future before television comes into its own on the continent of North America. Canada will likely not have television before the United States.

Public impression has generally been to the effect that television was not yet practicable but if Britain finds it practicable, it must be practicable, that is mechanically. Of course it may be that from the financial standpoint, television may not be practicable in North America.

CLOTHES MAKE THE MAN

How many a man would have been satisfied if he had all the clothes that a United States butler spoke of (the other day in a fire case! The list of articles and the value of the goods were staggering. They had been destroyed in the fire which burned his employer's home.

If the butler were such costly raiment, what did it cost to dress his employer!

When the man who is in need reads of the fortune in these togs, he must think, "What a waste and what a good of it all! How much happier is that butler than I!"

Economists tell that the rich employer does a service by all the industries engaged in getting such rich dress for his servant.

LACK OF PRETENCE

People will appreciate Mrs. Putnam's honesty in saying simply that "there was no purpose or reason for it"—the flight, that is—and that she had not planned it, made it or intended it to prove" anything.

This is a great relief from the frequent protestations that such a personal triumph immediately advances aviation generally in this or in other directions. She did a really spectacular thing in a calm and unspectacular way.—Baltimore Sun.

AGE OF MARVELS AHEAD

The age upon us will be one of the most momentous in history. What progress there has been in invention and discovery in the past four decades has been small as compared with the wealth of discovery of the next few decades provided the world rights itself sufficiently to be able to take advantage of the new discoveries and inventions and make invention, discovery and the manufacturing of the invented devices possible at a profit however small.

That seems the view of scientists. Science is gaining a deeper and deeper grasp on knowledge of the elements, on knowledge of psychology and the application of this exer-expanding knowledge will reflect itself in constant experimentation and testing. Farther and farther the unknown will be pushed back. Invention and invention will lighten man's work if man is able to take advantage of them without their controlling him.

We have but to look at the manner in which the recent invention of the airplane is spreading knowledge. Twenty years ago the plane was just able to take its part in the war. But planes did not start the war. Today planes have been so advanced that if war should break out, it is believed the declaration of war would be followed almost immediately by activity of planes in enemy territory. As the plane opens up work in our lands, develops mines, so is it linking up the countries of the world. Who dare say that the plane is static and not subject to change. It would be as silly to talk of elimination of machinery.

That tide once started, the world can never turn back. It must go on, experimenting, perfecting, doing. Once Columbus set sail for the West, the doom of the confined geographic knowledge of the fifteenth century was sealed. The gates were flung open wide to discovery.

Perhaps this is some such age. The war and its aftermath produced a strange situation—it has by breaking up so many cherished ideals, made the world one and with the world as unit, science is going forward.

No forecaster can even try to tell what the future has in store. As we are in many respects ahead of the 'nineties', so the 'forties', 'fifties' and 'sixties' of this century will be far different from the present.

WHENCE COMES THE MONEY?

Mayor McGeer would have Vancouver engage in a $200,000,000 public works programme, which is a tall undertaking. If every city and town in the country were to propose a similar venture, where would all the money come from? The municipalities themselves could not do the financing, for they are all in more or less of a hole as it is.—Montreal Gazette.

MONEY MUDDLES

The man who has two nickels to rub together has to keep his eye on them these days for fear one of them will be filched from him by monetary legerdemain. Where he has got past ordinary pickpockets, gold brick pedlars, and even the tax collector, he still has to cope with plain and fancy confiscation through Government currency policies. The French went through that in the nineteen-twenties and when the Government finally got through and stabilized the franc again they had clipped off 80 per cent of its gold value. To the rentier (and France is largely composed of rentiers and those who plan to become rentiers), this was equivalent to national bankruptcy, paying only twenty cents on the dollar to the creditor—himself.

Deputy Paul Reynaud, former Minister of Finance, declares that three solutions only are now possible for France. Firstly, to let the franc find its own level, as the pound sterling has done. Secondly, to devalue the franc with a new gold content, much as the United States has done. Thirdly, it is his choice—to seek a stabilization agreement with Britain and the United States, with devaluation of franc level by level. Keeping with the changed gold value of other currencies.

Meanwhile, in Great Britain, there is developing a tendency, shown in current opinion between bankers, starting from disagreements as to whether British recovery can proceed much further without a marked increase in prices. Those who, like Mr. McKenna, feel that there is plenty of leeway left in the home market, view with concern any tendency to continuation of sterling's independent course in a world of fluctuating currencies. Those, like Mr. Beaumont Pease and Mr. Beckett, who feel that without greatly increased world trade British recovery is in danger of coming to a standstill, are greatly concerned over the need for worldwide currency stabilization. Even Mr. Beckett, however, much as he desires stabilization, sees little actual prospect of it in the near future. It looks as if more headaches for the rest of us who try to figure out the value of our cash in terms of a fluctuating pound and a veriable dollar.—Montreal Star.

FATE OF THE CHESTNUT

Under a spreading chestnut tree the village smithy stands no more. Country boys and girls no longer play and loiter somewhere else than beneath its sheltering branches. If they go nutting, it must be for some alien or differing species. Painters have deprived it of its majestic feature of the rural landscape; woodworkers have had to look elsewhere for the material out of which fashion their posts and ties, crates and coffins. The chestnut blight, first recognized within a few miles of Times Square in 1904, has traveled through the forests of Southern New England and New York, west across Pennsylvania, south along the Blue Ridge, until it has now reached almost the southern limits of the botanical range of the tree. No way has yet been discovered to stop the spread of the air-borne fungus which has caused this disaster, unparalleled in forest history.

Can the chestnut come back? Under that arresting title Professor Hosmer of Cornell discusses its fate in a radio talk published textually in the current news letter of the New York State Forestry Association. His answer is No, not as we knew it when we were children. "The nature of the chestnut blight is such, and the damage it has done is so far-reaching, that there is little or no hope that the American chestnut will ever again take its place as an important tree in our Eastern forests." The occasional single trees and sprouts that are sometimes seen, still fighting for survival, serve only to raise false hopes, Professor Hosmer fears. The fungus will get them, soon or late, Aside from the slender chance of developing here and there a resistant native strain, to remind us sadly of the glories of the past, it may be possible in time to bring in other varieties of chestnut, such as those now thriving in China and Japap, which bear excellent nuts without being so susceptible to blight. But our own species, of which we were once so proud, appears to be doomed.—New York Times.

Be not penny-wise; riches have wings; sometimes they fly away of themselves, and sometimes they must be set flying to bring in more.—Bacon.

WISDOM'S GROWTH

How slow is wisdom's growth! The coral reef
Is not more arduously built through years
Than evidence which proves the use of grief
Or shows the bleak futility of tears!
We rear the structure, now by some
Which, like a spear-thrust, forced its lesson home;
Again by some bright period dream whose glory
Before us down each path we chanced to roam.

The days, the months keep adding to that store,
With grains of truth sometimes most dearly won,
And as the coral forms a widening shore
With slender palms that glisten in the sun
Love's insight here, here verity pain bought
Build up at length the fair atolls of thought.

NEW JERSEY, faced with a mistrial through the illness of a juror in a very expensive case, and a possible added expense of a couple of hundred thousand dollars, will pass a law to permit juries with substitutes, a la hockey matches, so that to the dramatic phases which have been added to the dispensing of justice in New Jersey will be added the sporting element.

JUST ASKING FOR A FIGHT, the game fish of Belleville district await the next fishing season with eager expectancy of more and better fishermen, challenging the world to come and get them—if they can. Mr. Hillsey, past President of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce, recently brought to the attention of that body the great potential resources in attractions this district holds for tourists, fishermen and hunters, and urged that a systematic plan of publicity be adopted in order to spread the knowledge of the manifold attractions of this district for summer visiors as far as possible. In accordance with Mr. Illsey's recommendation a publicity committee has been appointed which will no doubt act in an energetic manner. County publicity committees could co-operate with advantage with the Belleville Chamber of Commerce in securing a large tourist visitation this summer, with consequent augmentation of money in local circulation. There is no better game fishing in the world than in this district, no finer scenery, no more healthful atmosphere, with most any altitude to choose from—in short a summer playtime paradise without equal.

OLD AGE CAN BE MADE VERY HAPPY PERIOD

Learn to Love Books And Don't Neglect Amusements

By LOUIS E. BISCH, M.D., F.R.S.
Famous Authority on Health and Psychology.

Since three score years and ten no longer set the high-water mark of life, you may as well get used to the idea that you are likely to reach a ripe old age.

Twenty years have been added to the life span during the past century. In the census of 1930, we find over 2,000 centenarians!

One might suppose that such statements are good news. That one has a better opportunity than ever of living long ought to be hailed with joy by everybody. But it isn't. So scarcely the case.

Many, many people actually fear old age. They are afraid of becoming useless, helpless, lonely and annoying. This, however, need not be. Old age need not make you a burden to others as well as to yourself. If you have the will, you can learn to grow old gracefully.

That the best years are lived before forty or fifty is no longer held to be true. To be sure, we grow older, you change. You develop; you no longer think, feel and act as you did only five years before.

But these progressive changes, even the passing of youth, should not be too sorrowfully regretted. For everything we lose, we have also gained something in its stead. That, at least, should be the general drift of life. You can accomplish it if you so desire. It is only necessary to set to learn how.

But you must prepare for old age as early as possible. You must learn to be moderate in all things. Watch your health. Learn to love books. Don't neglect your amusements.

Practicing these few precepts will keep you alert, contented and vigorous throughout the period of your years. Free from passion, ripe in judgment, calm and serene in the security of your past, your old age will be a badge of honor and a blessing.

Nor is old age necessarily unattractive and confining. Plutarch learned Latin after seventy, and Cato took up Greek at eighty. Dryden did not begin his translation of the "Iliad" until he was almost sixty.

There are scores of other examples like these, especially in modern times.

No one is ever too old to learn something new or worth-while.

As Cicero, in his famous essay on old age, has said: "Let not the deepening hairs nor wrinkles can suddenly win respect; but the former part of the life honorably spent and the fruits of authority at the close" Old age will be what you make it. Then if you make up your mind that you want to be old and that you want to make old age the happiest time of your life.

Only one thing really. Don't let old age catch you unprepared.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint.

The use of mineral oil instead of olive or cotton seed oil is to be recommended to those who are heart on reducing. Such mineral oil must be made the basis of salad dressings. Besides, it helps to overcome constipation. Those who wish to reduce should also cut down on butter, milk, cream, starches and sugars. All liquids should be reduced to a minimum.

Centre League Hockey

An enthusiastic crowd of hockey fans gathered in Stirling Arena on Friday night to witness the double header between Glen Ross and Evergreen, Bethel and West Huntingdon. Glen Ross won their tilt by a margin of one goal. The score being 3-2, West Huntington's victory was more decided. The score being 4-0. Both games were packed with thrills.

Summary

Right after the face off, Don Reid made a nice solo rush and got the first shot on goal. Fraser returned and nearly fooled Brostwordt, Glen Ross goal tender, but Brostwordt stopped them all. Clarence Magee drew down the front point when he tripped Brown just as he was about to shoot. It was at this point that Ray Brooks collided with Don Reid. He was knocked unconscious, and was taken to the dressing room, remaining out of the play for the rest of the period which ended with no score. The play was at centre ice most of the time.

Second Period

Armstrong popped things up with the opening of the second period, when he broke through Evergreen's strong defence and scored the first goal unassisted. Don Reid then made a spectacular rush, and drifting the defence he passed out to Magee, right in front of the net to score. A few minutes later Magee scored on a pass from Armstrong to put Glen Ross in the lead. Play continued fast. Both teams had chances to score but the goalies were on their job. The period ended 2-1 for Glen Ross.

Third Period

As play resumed, Evergreen gave all they had to even the score. Their goal lead: Armstrong broke away, took his shot on Brostwordt, and Fraser was there for the rebound, making it 3-1. The boys from Evergreen were not beaten when, a moment later, Don Reid scored on a pass from Fraser, making it 3-2, Evergreen tried to tie it up, but in the dying moments of the game their hopes were shattered when Fraser scored on a shot from centre ice. Final score ended 4-2 for Glen Ross.

Armstrong, Fraser and Brooks were best for Glen Ross. Rodgers, Magee and Reid were well applauded by the crowd, making many fine

starts at the table

How you feel and how you look depend largely on the foods you eat. The Vitamin D provides the "bulk" to prevent common constipation—caused by lack of this essential fiber.

Common constipation frequently causes headaches, loss of appetite and energy. Fet, in most cases, it can be overcome by eating right and safely by eating a delicious cereal.

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN is a natural food of unusual merit. It relieves "bulk" in convenient and concentrated form. ALL-BRAN also provides vitamin B and iron.

Isn't this sunny way better than taking patent medicines? Two tablespoonfuls of ALL-BRAN daily are usually sufficient. Chronic cases, with each meal. If relief is not obtained, see your doctor.

Serve ALL-BRAN as a cereal, or use in cooking. Get the red-and-green pack-age at your grocer's. Made by Kellogg in London, Ontario.

From Belleville to St. Petersburg, Fla.

We left Belleville on December 2 and by Ben Dean rolled out the hour of three in the afternoon. We headed for Toronto but the shades of night were falling when we reached the outskirts of Port Hope. Here was a great place with "Tourists" in big letters at the entrance of the semi-circular drive. What a delightful place!" we exclaimed. It was a big colonial brick residence with just a big Ben Dean rolled out the across the road was Lake Ontario in one of its restless moods. But we were so disappointed when in answer to our knock a man appeared and said "Sorry, we are not taking tourists since the cold weather began." It felt like getting "bitter" to remove your sign then."

As we drove into the town of Port Hope we looked eagerly for a place to stay for the night. The "Welcome" and "Superb" greeted us. Here we spent a very comfortable night, a double room with private bath—large and airy—was welcomed by us benighted and weary travellers. Not tired from the journey but by the preparations which were lightened by the kind assistance of neighbors.

Then we started on the first morning out. We had breakfast at the "Royal" at Whitby, then pressed on with Niagara Falls our objective. By going over Burlington Beach, we escaped the traffic of Hamilton. It was still daylight as we passed towards the river. At Stony Creek we stopped at a wayside eating place, presided over by a number of young men who served us there. The surroundings and furnishings were very artistic. The chairs and tables, the carved wood work and pillars, the glowing gas grate, the unusual cooking utensils and settees, all tempted us to linger but we must go on. As we passed beyond St. David's Village, the Heights of Queenston arose on our right. We then got our first sight of the tall monument erected here to the memory of one of England's greatest generals, Sir Isaac Brock. It is built on the top of the Heights and is a prominent object for feet high. Here, as history relates, he fell, an easy mark for the American officers of which rumor has it, he was a target. Here, also, the Canadian and American authorities have placed tablets, revealing his rank in the army.

We passed through Queenston and Lewiston. Here the river is narrow and the bridge that spans it is short, but high. Here we paid the duties of the Canadian and American authorities, the officers of which rushed out to question the passers-by. The driver stopped at the Canadian office and was made only a short time. Then we passed to the American side and three hundred feet we came out. The first asked: "Where are you going?" "How long are you going to stay?" "Have all got a passport?" and so on. He was the first American we met. He also said: "Come inside." The third one demanded the bridge toll of 25 cents. The business of the car took a longer time and night had drawn her curtain and the lights were on before we were told we could go. "Where do we find the road up the hill to the city of Niagara Falls?" we asked. "After the second traffic light," he answered. It bothered me somewhat to know where we would find that light. The road was very steep and winding and when we reached the top of the very long hill, our car seemed inclined to slip down again. "Go on, go on," came from the back seat. "Don't let her get what lights! What traffic! and cars flying in every direction. "Keep on your own side," came from the back seat." "I can't, we are close to the edge." "Keep on the right side of the road." "Don't worry! We know what we are." Just then we saw a man building with "Information Bureau" painted on the roof.

We parked the car and the driver said, on coming out, "I know now just where we are. We will strike the Sheridan Trail just out of the city." Soon we were out on a rather lonely country road with the lights of the two cars, glaring shining far behind us. Perhaps we will not find a place to stay all night on this lonely road. Let's stop at this garage. "The people over there in that bungalow take tourists in the summer but they look their sign down a few days ago," the man said. I would not let any of the others ask for a lodging as I have had very few refusals to refuse me a favor. How glad I was to see their friendly faces and receive their kind welcome. Theirs was a lovely home and we were delighted to be their guests overnight. We had breakfast there and we shall long remember that platter of bacon and newly laid eggs. (They kept their own hens). We were loath to leave these kind people but a thin slicet was falling as we struck out for the Sheridan Trail. We found this without much difficulty and sped away to the south east over this smooth hard road, lonely, leaving behind Buffalo and Tonawanda on the right. On we went at that speed noon through this fine level part of New York State, the sun shining out in fitful gleams, until early afternoon when we passed Batavia, we were in country thickly dotted with Greigsville and Dansville and came out at last on No. 9 highway which is the direct route south east from Rochester. About 5 p.m. we reached Painted Post. By this time the snow had turned to sleet again. We had been tired and whiting after home and the boy who served us was eager to know about Florida and what we expected there. He had the youthful outlook on life and told us his plans. He lived in the live village and how it came to be called by its present name. It was at one time a meeting place of the Five Nation Indians and Chief Montour had erected a pond here, fantastically carved and artistically painted. It stood here for many years but ten years ago it was removed to the Metropolitan Museum, New York City, to be kept as a relic in memory of this great chief.

We were now nearing the boundary of Pennsylvania and were anxious to know when we would reach the old Susquehanna Trail. After driving some miles, we thought we should see a sign showing where we would enter on this road. We stopped to inquire and were told, "Turn back five miles." "Five miles —ten in all!" But there was nothing for it but to retrace our way that five miles. There as plain as day was the big sign in clear large letters, "Susquehanna Trail." Taking about the history of this road, and others driven by without noticing the sign.

Night found us again homeless as we drove into Lawrenville, Pennsylvania. Since leaving Painted Post, we had come through the Alleghany Mountains. The road and wound about the high hills following the valleys of streams, tributaries of the Susquehanna. To our right and left, the good farming land laid out in fields around the comfortable homes, extended far up the sides and over the summits. In the distance could be seen the smoke of long trains winding across the hillsides. In some places the mountains ended abruptly in a steep cliff overlooking the highway and train beneath. At other places the mountains sloped high and densely wooded and cast a dark shadow on the road. In Pennsylvania these mountains became higher, the valleys broader and deeper, the valleys wider till at last we reach the broad Susquehanna itself at Williamsport and follow its course to Harrisburg that night and Lawrenville we were pleased to come into the cheerful and warm welcome of Mr. Dean's home. We sat in the beautiful living-room and after a wide our hostess as she told us many things about Lawrenville, how it had grown from a village of about 500 inhabitants until a young prosperous town with a large output of oil in 1930. Now there is a payroll of many thousands of dollars and the town has grown to be one of the many towns about the country. Then Mrs. Dean left us to the depression at all," she said.

The roads in Pennsylvania are all state roads and we were indebted to this state for the excellent care it takes of its roads. We left the road that night at Lawrenceville and the next morning there was a light snow on the hills and road. But gangs of men were out early in the evening with their gasoline lanterns to places where needed, such as curves and hills and by the working gangs we passed the next morning. We were soon beyond this town and were now in touch with Washington our objective. The next night we stayed at a farm house on the Susquehanna River and next morning passed through Harrisburg, Gettysburg, Hagerstown and reached Washington at 2 p.m. on Saturday. We brought letters of introduction and were guides were waiting to show us the sights. We were taken to the house out where was fought the great decisive battle of the Civil War now a beautiful park made in great memorable speech. But time pressed and we must away. We had a lovely view from the road the tombs and monuments of the men placed in the Arlington Cemetery, and higher and more conspicuous than all the Washington Monument. Winter with its accompanying ice and snow was on every trunk and branch of the trees on Washington had seemed our Waterloo, as we had experienced no cold to speak of since of our homes. But our plan of an easy way to get to Florida "Down the States" was on the outskirts Saturday afternoon and night and we passed through Capitol and early Sunday morning—as early as 4 a.m.—the country changed.

Readers will tire of this and I may give you an account of the rest of the journey through Florida.

It was a long journey, but to be with the bright sunshine and embracing air all about us, the flowers, the beautiful foliage of shrub and tree, the orange groves with their crowds of people, the mocking bird and the cardinal, after all the weariness and sacrifice one endures in coming. The most beautiful city of the journey and surpass the days spent here.

BILL EXECUTORS FOR DUTY OWING

Hepburn Says "Political Influence" Used in Administration

Toronto, Feb. 4 (CP)—Charging "political influence" in connection with administration of the Succession Duties Act, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn today revealed one large estate had been undervalued to the extent of $5,000,000.

As a result of investigations over a period of years government auditors discovered this discrepancy between collections and the declaration of the estate, Mr. Hepburn said, and the executors are being billed for the increased duty.

Mr. Hepburn declined to name the particular estate and he also said he knew of several others, where collections were considered inadequate. Duties were not in proportion to the value of the estate.

Asked if there was any suspicion of corruption on the part of treasury officials, the premier replied in the negative.

"It was more to political influence than anything else," he said.

Scoring "laxness on administration" the Premier said this condition had led to the appointment of auditors from the treasury department.

Returning to the political aspects of the situation, the Premier declared the legal firm with which a minister in the cabinet of former Premier George Henry had been associated, had completed the settlement. "In any case the letter heads still bore his name," Mr. Hepburn said.

He refused to divulge the name of the cabinet Minister and said "it is unfair for a cabinet Minister to retain his connection with a legal firm after entering the cabinet."

What You Should Know About Houses

A Weekly Feature Service Supplied to the Canadian Press by Home Builders' Service Bureau, 177 Jarvis St., Toronto 2

ADD A NEW CHARM TO YOUR HOUSE

The general appearance and attractiveness of the front door of your home is the first impression a visitor gets of you. The features combined in every pleasing and attractive entrance are, hardware, woodwork, glazing, electric wiring, flagging, brickwork, trellis arrangements, exterior painting, and as you down the line to such minute details as the electric push button to the door bell or even a wrought iron foot scraper.

A door beautifully fit ting front door may ruin the entire effect of the expensive and well conceived home. Therefore, it pays any home owner to give careful attention to the front entrance, and in the same way be greatly enhanced the value and appearance by adding or renovating around the front entrance.

If you are anxious to make the front entrance of your home as pleasing as possible, you will not attempt to dabble with this very important subject without first obtaining professional advice. An architect is prepared through his years of training and study to recommend certain features that you may never have known might be excused for overlooking.

It is extremely easy to blunder if an inexperienced person attempts to tamper with an entrance. A lumber company or sash and door manufacturer can assure the home owner a good job, but no matter how much skill is expended, maximum satisfaction cannot be obtained if the other features of the entrance have not been carefully considered in the design.

Perhaps twenty years ago in which front doors were equipped with a large window in the upper half, is now conspicuous by its absence and in lieu thereof we find small panels, usually with attractive well designed hardware affixed thereto.

Most people ask for a light at the front entrance. Suitable electrical equipment may be had during the evening to bid welcome to expected guests, or it may be flashed on when an unexpected knock comes on the door, to assist the hostess in welcoming her visitors.

Specially designed switches can be installed which leave the light lit for a short time after the toggle has been thrown, and is recommended for just such purposes. Using this particular kind of a switch, the fumbling may have the opportunity of leaving the house, locking the door and getting into the automobile before the front light extinguishes itself. It is a convenience that any family can appreciate.

Make no mistake, the entrance ensemble is the first item to attract the attention of the visitor at your home. Every front door creates some part of an impression. It may be favorable or otherwise. If otherwise, it represents a considerable amount of skill and taste in interior decoration of a favorable effect, and it is by no much a matter of expense as it is or design. An inexpensive entrance ensemble expertly designed and executed, is a prime asset for any home.

DO GENTLEMEN PREFER DUMB-BELLS?

All girls are actresses, according to a discovery that a learned professor in a Middle-western college has just revealed to the newspapers. And there's just one favorite role that every wily coquette and daughter of them is forever engaged in playing. It's that of the lovely dumb-bell.

With some young stress, the professor admits, this impression doesn't require much effort. But even the brightest of these girls who secretly enjoy making grades, or girls simply overflowing with good practical sense, usually are willing to work hard at the job of pretending that they are comparatively, irresistibly stupid, because they know what is to be gained by it.

A girl cannot get her evenings satisfactorily full up with dates who have the attention from boys that makes her life endurable unless she learns to keep her brains in their place. That is to say, completely out of sight.

I have no quarrel to pick with the wise and experienced professor of youth who has made this revelation. I can only politely wonder that it has taken him so long to discover something that most of us have known for a very long time.

Think for a moment. Have you ever heard an enamored youth exhibit his choice of a best girl on the ground of her intelligence Or an art as it will be immediately, never Fair—for engagements, or marriage, evident.

Or your father may propose a toast to you and your fiance. Or your mother, your father, you and your fiance may stand in a receiving line, and as the guests are greeting your mother and father, they may "present" you and your fiance to them. This, simply and delightfully, tells the guests what the party is for.

6. First remember that "congratulations" are expressed to the bridegroom-to-be, not to the fiancee or the bride. We say, or should say, "Congratulations, Bob" or "Congratulations, Mr. Ward" And whenever your friends tell you of their best wishes, thank them ... "Thank you so much, Betty. I appreciate so much your good wishes."

7. This does concern the groom, for he is to be congratulated, for this is one of the few items of the wedding in which he gets the groom pays. The amount of this fee is according to the groom's pocket-book and generosity. But if a rather large house wedding, it would be a courtesy for the groom to have probably the groom would wish to considerably increase this amount. It's up to him to decide—and you and I must let him.

WALLSBRIDGE W. I.

Correct Manners

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

(Copyright 1935 King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

BETROTHAL ETIQUETTE

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Is it customary to have a diamond engagement ring engraved

2. My boy friend gave me a lovely diamond ring for Christmas and after talking it over, we don't want to be engaged until November of this year. He says he bought the ring because he wanted to get me something nice, and while he was spending the money, he thought it best to invest in a good diamond. Since we don't want to be engaged until November on which hand should I wear the ring Would it be correct to wear it on the engagement finger, and have it engraved later, if the latter is customary?

3. Just as soon as you receive a diamond, is it necessary to announce your engagement, as in my case, is it all right to wait until November?

4. When my engagement is to be announced, Mother and Father have decided to announce it at a gathering, but since my parents do not approve of my getting married, it would be impossible to announce it at a bridge or dinner party. What kind of party or gathering would you suggest?

5. Is the usual announcement made on the engagement ring?

ANSWERS

1. Very often the engagement ring is engraved inside with the initials of the fiance and the date of the engagement.

2. The minute that you begin to wear your engagement ring in public you make public announcement of your engagement. By the wearing of your ring in public that announces the engagement, not the fact that it is engraved inside. Of course you can go through the motions of exchanging your ring at another finger, but since it is a diamond solitaire and since your friends will undoubtedly be ready for the announcement of your engagement, or marriage, it is hardly likely you will have to do some pretty continual explaining about wearing his ring on any finger. If you don't want to announce your engagement yet, you must not wear your ring at any time when it will be observed by your friends.

3. It isn't necessary to announce your engagement just as soon as you receive your diamond. That is for you and your fiance wish to wait until November 1st. Then after the announcement of your engagement then you mustn't wear your ring in public until the day you make the announcement.

4. Your engagement may be announced at a luncheon given by your mother to your girl friends, or at a dinner given by your mother and father, or at a tea or reception or supper-party given by your mother and father. The party may be formal or informal, as you wish.

5. Remember that the simplest way of making this announcement is in the best taste. For instance, at the beginning of a luncheon or dinner, or into the middle of a party, you may slip your engagement ring on your finger, "the finger, and when it is observed

How A Bright Child May Be Handicapped

By LISA GRENELLE

Freddie Fresh is a problem. He answers, which delighted his teachers, bored himself, and didn't add any to his popularity with the other boys. Not that Freddie appeared to care much, for he had a whole-hearted contempt for his fellow students. Why not? In comparison with himself they were stupid. Although of his own age they seemed years younger not only scholastically but as to behavior and point of view.

Freddie's feeling of inferiority but one of superiority separated him from the other boys. Children of his own age simply bored him. They had nothing to offer.

What sort of a person Freddie might become under this conviction is not pleasant to contemplate. Conceit is not an endearing quality and it leads to a loneliness against which even the most complete self-sufficiency is hardly an adequate defense. But Marko, the school psychologist, and all-wit saved the situation, cured Freddie's growing conceit, rescued him from his bleak

Where He Didn't Excell

It was this way, Marko plucker up courage to ask Freddie to explain a math problem to him. Freddie tried, but he couldn't get anything through Marko's head perhaps he wasn't very patient. Anyhow, both boys lost their tempers — Marko, flushed with shame, finding cornered and trapped or, growled, "Well, I can lick you, anyway". Marko's standard term of to any argument. And Freddie being exasperated to the point of fury himself, took him up on it.

Marko licked him with ease. Freddie was no slugger, no wrestler either, but Marko was a great hulking fellow, and he'd had practice. He was pretty humiliating for Freddie. Difficult to free superior lying flat on your back and shouting into your enemy's face, even if you know he's not your equal mentally.

"I can lick anybody." Marko said, almost apologetically, as Freddie got up. He looked as if he'd like to help Freddie dust himself off. "It's just a trick," he went on modestly, "you got to know how to hit."

A Good Lesson

"How do you? Freddie asked. "maybe it's conching I'd better learn."

"This way," Marko said, "if you want to come up a my room I'll teach you in no time."

"All right," Freddie said, "and I'll get you through that math."

And so this strange friendship began. Freddie tutoring the dunce, the dunce teaching Freddie how to box, wrestle, jump—introducing him to the world of sport, which was good for Freddie in more ways than one. Forcing him as it did into a companionship in which he came out with no honors for several friends. "He wasn't a bad sort after all," the other boys said. And Freddie in his awkwardness, grew to have a wholesome admiration for the greater ability of his once despised contemporaries.

All the glamour of the Orient is to be found in the Chinese costume that consists of trousers of ebony black satin, a loose, flowing tunic of satin coat and a long sash of jade green chiffon. Under the coat is a jade green satin blouse.

We want wrinkles when they are fashioned with skill, making realistic crepe. A frock of beige matelasse has a flared skirt gathered into drawn by beige cords, and a cord girdle and tassels. The cord is clasped by topaz and rhinestone clips. The sleeves have shirred inserts.

Once again stylists report that women down South are wearing dress as much sports shirt. A fine model in matt silk mesh is seen at times, ties at the neck and has fancy pearl buttons.

There's no use being without knitted things this season, South or the country. With the demand for blue, comes a suit with a very pale blue mottled coat, with a dark blue tie flecked with light blue, and a matching beret. The skirt is of the dark blue knit flecked with light blue. The suit is knitted on the cross.

AT THE BELLE

"The Little Minister"
Greatest Role For Katherine Hepburn.

Starring the brilliant Katherine Hepburn, Sir James M. Barrie's much-loved romance, "The Little Minister", comes to the talking picture screen, as a vibrant, colorful and deeply moving romance.

Never before has Miss Hepburn been afforded as colorful and dynamic a role as that of Babbie in "The Little Minister". The dashing, romantic gypsy girl, long cherished in the hearts of the world, is perfect human material for the rich talents of the star of "Morning Glory", "Spitfire" and the unforgettable "Little Women" of a year ago.

Upon this talking picture version of the romance of the lady masquerading as a gypsy maid, and the shy Scotch clergyman, R.K.O. Radio has lavished all its artistic and technical riches.

John Beal, one of the finest of Hollywood's younger actors, is seen as Gavin Dishart, the little dominie whom Babbie loves. Alan Hale is the temperamental ruffian, Rob Dow. The talented Donald Crisp plays Lord Rintoul, her guardian. Other notable and popular figures in Miss Hepburn's supporting cast are Donald Crisp, Lumsden Hare, Andy Clyde, Ralph Watson, Beryl Mercer, Dorothy Stickney, Mary Gordon, Elly Malyon, Reginald Denny, Leonard Carey, Herbert Bunston, Harry Beresford and Barlowe Borland.

The famous role of Babbie gives Katherine Hepburn opportunity to display her extraordinary and versatile talents. Advance reports are that it takes its place supremely in the history of brilliant character portraits she has painted for the talking screen. Living vividly, lustrously, the dancing figure in the humdrum life of the little Scotch village of Thrums, Babbie is a part worthy of the great stars who have proved the value of the drama in the cramped confines of the legitimate stage. Older play-goers will remember Maude Adams, who played it nearly 2,000 times from coast to coast.

Never has a motion picture been filled with more drama and color than "The Little Minister". The town of Thrums, Barrie's own village, where his action takes place, was built on a leafy valley near Hollywood. To the perfect peddling of Miss Hepburn and spirit of the famous tale, the studio obtained the services of the noted Scottish novelist, Robert Watson, as literary and technical adviser on the production.

Building, interior settings and costumes are all absolutely faithful to the place, the time and the story itself.

Against this colorful background Miss Hepburn and her fellow players play the larger romance of the vivacious gypsy girl and the reticent young clergyman—the role which has been beloved by millions since Sir James M. Barrie wrote it forty-three years ago.

In addition to its lovely romance, "The Little Minister", which comes to the Belle tomorrow (Wednesday), is filled with entertaining action of the sort that is the life-blood of motion pictures.

The loves and hates, jealousies and humors of the little Scotch village are woven into the love story, and form a moving, many-colored background to the highlights of the tale.

From the first announcement interest mounted at the choice of "The Little Minister" as a starring vehicle for Katherine Hepburn. The studio has had a number of leading roles sufficiently vital for this dynamic young star, who has captured the imagination of the world's film-going public as has few figures in screen history.

"Babbie" in "The Little Minister" was inspiration. It was early conceded that if any serval role can overshadow the star's Jo March in "Little Women", it is that of Babbie in "The Little Minister". In this famous and beautiful romance which burn has been afforded a new means to delight her millions of friends and followers and make new ones.

Warm with romance, rich with color, with stirring drama, "The Little Minister" gives Katherine Hepburn another magnificent role in which to play her acting genius and even more firmly establish herself as the screen's most amazing young star.

"Holiday Lane", a delightful picture in full beautiful Technicolor, and another of those popular Pete Smith "Goofy Movies" will be exhibited on the same program.

Eddie Cantor Starring

"Kid Millions". Eddie Cantor's latest annual screen production, which closed a highly successful engagement at the Belle tonight, is the season's most colorful picture in the way of song-and-girl entertainment.

Ethel Merman, Ann Sothern and Eve Sully are seen in the principal roles, the gorgeous Goldwyn girls make a stunning background.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Evensong"

Screen Drama Shows World of Great Music

Like a book of many chapters reads the life of Ireia, the operatic star featured in the romantic story of "Evensong" which is the current attraction at the Capitol Theatre.

Here is the drama of a great figure in the world of music—the Queen of Song—acclaimed in all the world capitals. Her life is revealed on the screen from the moment when, at the foot of the ladder of fame, she reaches her eyes to the heights and began to climb, turning her back on marriage, on domesticity, even on love. Here is the inside story of what happened to the girl who was once a simple girl in an humble Irish home, and who was destined to become the world's most glamorous figure in the world of great music—the idol of her loves and of those who loved her!

Real Life Story

Drawn, it is said, from known incidents in the life of one of the most famous of all opera divas, "Evensong" presents a poignantly powerful drama of a woman's concessions to the demands of her art, and her struggle to find happiness for herself, in spite of the sacrifice entailed, the right to love and be loved. It is the theme of a best-selling novel by Beverley Nichols, which Vicki Baum and Edgar Ward Knoblock—both of which have been drawn upon in fashioning this screen version.

Evelyn Laye Starred

Evelyn Laye, gifted star of the comedy and light opera stage, is seen in the leading role of the successful prima donna. Miss Laye has in her present role, opportunity to display her talents, both lyric and dramatic, which have contributed to her success as abundantly in the past. A notable cast has been assembled behind her, at the head of which stand Fritz Kortner, in the role of a hard-driving manager, Impresario Armelia, a noted coloratura soprano; and Alice Delysia, the famous Megin Kiddie singer of world.

Added Featurettes

A colorful and talented Broadway Brevity entitled "Show Kids" features the famous Megin Kiddie in clever song and dance numbers and a Krazy Kat Kartoon in Sweny Land, "The Hypnotist" complete the feature attraction.

BETTER LIGHTING MERCHANTS' HOPE

tities at cost and the difference between the wholesale price charged by and the actual cost of production is to remain for the consumer to pay. Reid stated that in four years, 1929-1933, the sum of $9,493.26 had been returned to the city by the Hydro but none of it had been expended upon the rural districts and there would be a substantial sum due.

Vastly improved lighting could be provided in Belleville, the East Ward, Bridge Street and Victoria Avenue if that money was used for spending in the city, Reid declared, said Mr. Reid.

The future were 654 street lamps in operation at a yearly cost to the city of $10,902.; while in Deseronto, Napanee and Trenton the yearly cost of $11,607.00. Present lighting in Belleville, Reid declared, cost $13,787.

Mr. Reid urged very strongly that the Merchants Association urge the City Council to use the Hydro power to give whatever they elected better street lighting as originally intended.

Ten Cents a Night

Manager Scott, of the Hydro Commission, in his address declared that the local Hydro Commission was not free to give whatever they wished with the electricity, the commission was governed by the Hydro Act which prohibited anything being given free by local commissions. An improvement in the way of development of the local lighting system was possible, declared Mr. Scott, and explained how much better store window lighting could be obtained at small cost. Brilliantly lighted windows could be obtained for ten cents per night, which would be more than paid for by profit on the extra goods sold from window display.

Hydro profits are returned to the consumer in reduced rates, said Mr. Scott, the more light used the cheaper the rates. Hydro belongs to the people and in Belleville the consumers have been saved $500,000 in reduction of rates since the system was taken over. Light is the cheapest thing we can get, better light, better sight, said Mr. Scott.

After the matter had been thoroughly discussed a resolution was passed that the City Council be asked to use at least fifty per cent of the steet lighting money returned by Hydro for improved lighting of Front, Pinnacle, East Bridge street and Victoria Avenue, Pinnacle street be a parking area required better lighting.

C. T. Dolan, Jos. Delaney, Russell Woodley, Ed Shapiro took part in the discussion urging better lighting question and John Livesey explained the by-law which the meat merchants ask the City Council to adopt.

A resolution was passed endorsing the aims and objects of the Belleville Trade Group which is working for reciprocal trade with England and Wales.

In the matter of early closing of stores a number of early closing by-laws from other places were presented and being left over for the committee in charge. Each line of business having petitions signed by three-fourth of the merchants concerned can have a by-law passed by the City Council limiting the hours for doing business. A committee was appointed to go further into the matter and report back to the association.

Annual Meetings Of City Churches

John Street United

The annual congregational meeting of John Street United Church was held recently in the church hall, splendid reports by the many societies and organizations revealed that the work of the church had been well advanced by the enthusiasm and devotion of all members. The reports showed that the congregation now enjoys the healthiest financial position in several years. $10,500 having been raised for all purposes exclusive of the building mortgage.

The minister, Rev. Robt. Hall was chairman of the meeting and T. E. Thomas was appointed secretary.

Mr. J. B. Findlay, clerk of session, reported an addition of 54 new members, 31 by profession of faith, and 23 by certificate. During 1934 the congregation lost five members by death and-nine by removal of certificates, leaving a net resident membership of 453. The session reported that the services of worship were well maintained throughout the year and expressed satisfaction with the generous spiritual atmosphere of the church as a whole. The healthy interest taken in the work of all organizations received favorable comment.

Special mention was made of the high standard of the church music both vocal and instrumental under the direction of Miss Leona Riggs. Mr. Alec Johnston, organist, was also felt that much of the credit for the success of the church services was due to the fine quality of the music.

The minister referred to the great loss sustained by the congregation in the death of its two senior elders following the introduction of a brief service of remembrance the congregation stood in a moment of silent tribute.

The work of the church school and of the various young people's societies was introduced by the superintendent, Mr. A. D. Archibald, who called upon the several representatives for statements of their activities. The outside record was given in the reports of the departmental secretaries attributed to the zeal of the superintendent who in turn gave credit to the loyalty of all teachers and officers.

Due recognition was made of the splendid work of the Christian Life Society which organization contributed the sum of $833.00 toward the church budget.

The regular givings toward the Missionary and Maintenance Fund of the church, augmented by the recent special appeal, showed a substantial increase over that of last year. The total amount subscribed for all missionary and benevolent purposes reached $2272.00.

The congregation commended the practical enterprise of the Young Women's Guild in promoting the school for leisure to meet a very apparent need in the life of the church in the community.

A letter was received from the family of the late R. J. Graham requesting that permission be granted to place a memorial in the church a memorial window in his memory. This request was gratefully acknowledged and assent given.

In moving, on behalf of the congregation, that a tablet to the memory of the late R. J. Graham, be placed in the church, Mr. Robert Trenghaven paid tribute to his fine character and to his devoted labors in the interests of the church. This motion was seconded by Mr. Findlay and unanimously endorsed by the congregation.

Five new members were elected to the Board of Session, namely, Wm. Blatherwick, G. A. Ferguson, I. E. Thomas, Arthur Hill, W. E. Kerr. The following were elected to the Board of Stewards: J. Ed. Buchanan, Mac Hall, C. McIlwaine, and Laurie Lewis.

TWO CANDIDATES IN FIELD

OTTAWA, Feb. 5.—(CP)—Possibility of two Liberal candidates being in the field for the Federal election of June 14 and the forthcoming elections, was a certainty today when Dr. R. E. Parent declared official standard bearer.

E. R. E. Chevrier, sitting Liberal member of the House of Commons, already has twice been declared official candidate in the Capital's Eastern seat. Both candidates will likely remain in the field.

Belleville 'Combines' Defeated By Petes 8-7 After Leading the Winners Nearly All the Game

Winning Goal Scored With Only Seconds to Play

COVERT A STAR

Every Member of Team However, Turns in Fine Game

Coming from behind and staging a determined last minute effort the Peterboro intermediates defeated the Belleville "Combines" by the score of 8 to 7 in the first sterfiveli division at Peterboro last evening to retain first place in the "big six" group of the intermediate O.H.A. series. With the Thomas-led aggregation carrying the ball at the opening of the game the better part of the game and leading by the score of 7 to 5 with but four minutes left to play, the Petes, with their backs to the wall and led by Bill Callaghan, the ace scoring centre player, showed their prowess and courage by three fast goals, one being scored off a local player's skate during a scramble around the Belleville net. The return game between these two teams is scheduled to be played in Belleville tomorrow (Wednesday) night.

Belleville led by Covert, their tricky centre man, who did most of the early scoring ahead 1 to 0 at the end of the first period, 4 to 2 at the close of the second, and early in the third period were up 5 to 2, only to have the Petes come from behind with a wild rally in the last 15 minutes. Callaghan with four goals and three assists, Wray and Gould assists for the Petes, while Covert and C. Morgan were best for the visitors.

Belleville led by two goals to one at the end of the first period, Covert opening the scoring after ten minutes play when Carl Morgan batted in Dowsett's rebound after the latter and Ehler had carried the rubber in. The Petes evened it up 46 minutes later when Ellis registered on a pass from Welz, the puck sliding between Jeffrey's feet. Thirty seconds before the end of the period the visitors went out in front on Covert's low shot into the corner of the net after Ehler had given him a pass to beat the defence.

The visitors increased their lead to a heavy second period by scoring two quick goals in the middle of the session. Carl Morgan got the first one after Covert had passed out to him from a face off in the corner. Ten seconds later Covert broke away from centre and beat Foley with a long shot from just inside the blue line. The Petes fought back and with Ehler off hammered a goal past Jeffrey in a ganging attack. Shortly after Callaghan apparently scored, but the Belleville goal umpire refused to turn on the light and was removed.

Three Goals Up.

Early in the third session with the Petes doing a ganging act Belleville broke away and Covert scored from a mixup in front of the Petes' nets, putting the visitors ahead 4 to 2. But Callaghan went up alone and beat Jeffrey and then, given Creighton a pass for another quick goal to make it 5 to 4. Belleville caught the Petes all up the ice and Covert and C. Morgan combined for a goal by the latter, but Callaghan came back with another for the home team following Dowsett broke away and sailed in alone to score Belleville's last goal, making the score 7 to 5.

However, the Petes were not to be denied, Callaghan brought the puck out from behind the Belleville net and scored on a shot off Jeffrey's skate. Wray tied it up when he hammered in Callaghan's rebound and then got the winning goal after Callaghan and Dallin had combined through the Belleville defence.

MEDWICK ANXIOUS

NEW YORK, Feb. 5.—(CP)—Joe (Ducky-Wicky) Medwick who came up with 11 hits for the St. Louis Cardinals in the World Series, has not received his contract, but when he does, it had better call for $10,000 or else.....

He says if it doesn't, he'll join the holdout ranks with Jerome (Dizzy) Dean.

To which Sam Breadon, owner of the Cards who has hopes of signing Dean before leaving town, replied:

"I don't see how he can be dissatisfied with his contract when he hasn't received it."

It is believed Medwick received about $4,500 last year.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

It was a grand and glorious battle. For over fifty minutes the "Combines" literally swept the Petes before them, but eventually tired to give the homesters that slight edge just when it hurt most. If these two teams put on a show Wednesday night similar to the one staged on the Brock Street arena in Peterboro last evening, the local ice igaloo should be jammed to the doors. Thrills and spills were the order of the night and with exception of the accidental crash between Powers and Creighton and an argument over a goal, umpire all was hockey, no squabbling. The Powers-Creighton affair resulted in the latter being carried from the ice hors de combat after a collision in mid-ice.

There's an old saying—"As Caballine goes so go the Petes", and this surely held good last night when the Peterboro pitching-outfielder-centre-ice-scoring ace figured in on seven of the Petes' eight counters, but the locals say that Caballine with be well looked after on Wednesday night when the "Combines" intend to get sweet revenge. The locals played a bang-up game last night and deserved just as much credit in defeat as they would have received had the score had been reversed. The pace set all evening was enough to set the fans agog from start to finish. Naturally it was a great win for the home fans, and the well contingent of Peterboro fans signified their intentions of following the Petes to Belleville for tomorrow night's return game.

Last night's local reverse spoils the standing insofar as the Belleville squad is concerned, but Wednesday night's game is of paramount interest to the Petes, simply because another loss to them will allow the Campbellford Maroons to finish a tie with the Petes for first position. It is the intention of the locals to trim the Petes here and then sit back and watch the Petes and Maroons battle it out for first place, the "Combines" having to be satisfied with third position play-off berth.

Ho, ho—what's this we hear—of Knotty Lee and Art Lepper have proved bag and baggage into Peterboro, eh? It did not take them long to have a change of heart, just a matter of two days, that's all. Last week Lee and Lepper were strong for Belleville and the uplifting of senior baseball in this city. As a matter of fact they made a personal visit and canvass of the city and left town assuring all concerned that they'd be back in the matter of a few days all ready to talk business and organize a high class senior ball club in Belleville. Just twenty-four hours after leaving Belleville Lee and Lepper pop up in Peterboro and just when the Peterboro sharks are holding its reorganization meeting mind you, and today are bonafide members of the 1935 Petes, hey presto, the Peterboro "Sea Horses".

Early last autumn Hughie Campbell, then president of the Petes and manager of the Johnson Motors in Peterboro, intimated that he would sponsor senior baseball in Peterboro in 1935, but the name of the club would be changed to the Peterboro "Sea Horses". Other baseball minded persons interviewed agreed with Campbell at the time and it was generally believed Peterboro and one new club would be in the fold this year at Waterloo Station, London, as they took the local train. Harvey is ruled one of the best mittmen England has produced in many years.

It was a grand and glorious thing for the C.O.B.L. in 1935, but it has remained for Campbell alone to keep his promise although there is little doubt but what the Napanee Packards will be included in the Central League when the time comes. Last spring it was openly announced that if the Gibbards won the intermediate O.H.A. title, they would be elevated to a senior rating in 1935, with not a dissenting voice being heard at that time. With the recent announcement of the future intentions of the Picton club relating to their standing in intermediate "A" baseball the hand-writing is quite clear as to what to expect, at least four teams will play senior ball, namely Kingston, Oshawa, Napanee and Peterboro, while the situation in Belleville is becoming more pessimistic each day. "In union there is strength, while divided we fall."

"Elsewhere in today's paper is the lowdown on Friday night's senior baseball meeting. Briefly, here's what the executive decided unanimously upon: 1. Johnson Motors to run the team, called Sea Horses, next summer, but with the same executive as at present; 2. Knotty Lee has been engaged again to coach the Petes; 3. Several new faces will be seen when the squad takes the field this spring, including that of Art Lepper, Art is the star southpaw hurler with Trenton Valleytown last season, and he is now working at Johnson's here and will fling for the locals. Is this hot news for ball fans, or is it? Belleville, Oshawa, Kingston and Napanee papers please copy—and then get busy, as we're going to burn in the C.O.B.L. next summer! We're heartily in accord with what transpired at the April 5 meeting and congratulate the executive on what they did."

K-I-Y LEAGUE

The Ruff Riders were crowned champions of the Quinte section of the local K-I-Y League when they downed the Wharf Rats by the score of 3 to 2 at the curling rink last evening, the Ruff Riders going through their entire schedule without sustaining a single loss. In the remaining game played in the Manle section the Alleyviews beat Maroons defeated the Victorias 5 to 1 in a fighting-all-the-way affair.

In the midget series three games were scheduled, two being played as the Young Rangers defaulted their regular game to the S.E.A.C. kids. It's a hard checking game the Young Canadiens trimmed the Y. Juniors by the score of 2 to 1, Pepper and Hunter scoring for the winners while Burns notched the "Y" team's lone counter on McBride's past.

A second midget game saw the All Stars romp home to an 8 to 3 victory over the Maple Leafs. The winners proved for the better team and deserved their honors.

The line-ups:

Flying Canadiens (2)—Pepper, Clarke, Finkle, Jackson, Boyle. Hunter, Grass and F. Pepper.

"Y" Juniors (1)—Clark, Plummer, McBride, Burns, Jones, Barrett, Clare.

All Stars (8)—Warren, Peets, Moens, Graham, Elliott, High, Doran, Mansfield, Semark and Reeve.

Maple Leafs (3)—Whiteman, Kyle, Mallory, Scott, Hall, Gordon, Ramsay and Hay.

MARANVILLE TO PLAY WITH BRAVES

Leg Broken in Spring Training Last Year Heals Well

New York, Feb. 5.—(CP)— Little Rabbit Maranville was signed last again today with Boston Braves, not as a coach as was expected but as a player. If he makes good it will be a fine example of what a man can do in spite of a handicap.

Maranville's leg was broken March 20, 1934, in an exhibition game with the Yankees in St. Petersburg, Fla. He crashed into a catcher. When the Rabbit broke his left leg dangled at a grotesque angle. The Rabbit's long and colorful baseball career appeared surely to have come to an end there but the indomitable Rabbit would not admit defeat.

That was only the first of a series of misfortunes. The broken bones did not set properly. Four times they had to be broken and reset. He did not play a game all season. Even now he is limited to the park and the fans gave him a big hand. It was generally understood the Rabbit would continue with the Braves as a coach.

"Coach, my eye," said the Rabbit here yesterday. "I'm going to play again this year, all right. I'm putting my heart in this. I'll come back. I've been jogging a couple miles every day. Every week more and then I sprint. I'll go down South and I'll continue to get myself in shape gradually. I can do it."

The little Rabbit was almost fierce in his determination.

"I'm 43. I'm not lucky like Ruth. He grows younger. I've been playing in organized ball since 1911. I've been up 21 years. I don't count last year. I still have that natural ability to play ball, and I'm going to."

GUIDE CAMPBELL BY BLACK LINE

Guards Will Also Keep Gulls From Flying on Course

Daytona Beach, Fla., Feb. 5.—(AP)—Sir Malcolm Campbell, British automobile speed ace, will drive his car on a black line one 500 wide and about 10 miles long when he attempts to break the land speed record at 300 miles an hour or more.

Tests showed the practicability of the guide line. It will be made with black fuel oil and will cost about $1,000 to paint on each record-breaking tide will obliterate it. It will be laid down the centre of the beach for a line of flags will mark the water's edge and keep Campbell from getting too near the surf.

Over 7 sea gulls wing in over the course, a line of men with megaphones will be on hand to frighten them away. Campbell said a bird smashed his windshield once on Pendine Sands, England while he was racing and nearly caused him to crash.

McLARNIN NOT RETIRING

Vancouver, Feb. 5.—(CP) —Any rising young welterweight, or even a veteran boxer with designs on fighting honors, who entertains the fond hope of a more or less easy rise to the welter crown on the retirement of Jimmy McLarnin might just as well forget about that hope, for the present at least.

Jimmy has no intention of leaving the ring until he has to, Promise now on James is going to be busy. "Three fights a year average", says Jimmy.

RANGERS HAVE TOUGH HURDLE

Play Maroons And Will Try For Their 13th Win

(By the Canadian Press)

Though every team in the National Hockey League but Toronto Leafs may tonight, most of the interest will be centred in Montreal's forum, where New York Rangers and Maroons, the teams that seem to have gathered all the fire in the League to themselves, clash.

For Rangers it will be another test in the series they have gone through in the last seven days. Victors over Detroit Red Wings and Toronto in recent engagements, they take on Tommy Gorman's team confident they can run their unbeaten string to 13 games.

Maroons are in the midst of a drive they hope will take them to the Canadian Division leadership and in recent games have shown their best form of the season. They can come within seven points of Toronto by winning from Lester Patrick's boys.

For Rangers the reward of victory would be greater if Detroit beat Bruins when they meet them in Boston tonight. The New Yorkers would then move up into second place in the American Division, just behind Chicago Black Hawks, who entertain Canadiens in Chicago; St. Louis' Eagles play the injury-riddled Americans at New York in the fourth game tonight.

Large Audience Present at Entertainment in Auditorium

TWEED.—An interesting address "Communism and Christianity" was given on Sunday morning at the United Church by the pastor, Rev. R. R. Nicholson. The two greatest exponents of Communism were Karl Marx, a German, and Lenin, a Russian, both of whom were atheists. The principles of Communism have spread to all civilized countries of the world and the foundations of the Christian faith are seriously menaced.

Miss Helena McGee of Toronto, spent the week-end with her parents Mr. and Mrs. S. B. McGee.

Mr. Arthur Kerr, B.A., who is attending the College of Education at Toronto, was the guest of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Kerr, during the week-end.

A large audience was on hand on Friday night at Tweed Auditorium when "The Talk of the Town" company presented an interesting programme of talking pictures and vaudeville. An unfortunate delay of an hour and a half resulted from a break-down in the machine and it appeared as though the entertainment would be postponed until a future date. However, help was secured from Stirling and a local radio dealer, after considerable delay and the machine was repaired before the patience of the crowd was exhausted. The entertainment was sponsored by the local branch of the A.N.V.C., and was one of a series that is being presented during the winter months. The next picture to be given is based on Louisa M. Alcott's book "Little Women".

A discount of five per cent. is being allowed on the taxes of all the villags for prompt payment of them. Anyone who is an important decision reached by the Council at their last session.

CHRISTMAS DAY

CHAPTER SIXTY-NINE

Christmas had come to Lockwood again. A rainy Christmas this year. Rain, lashing the tryon trees and the bay calm on the hills, burned in the fields to golden logs. Dashing against the windows of the Carter house as though they pelted the air in fury. Dripping off the long leaves of the eucalyptus through the night.

Christmas . . . It lived up to its old tradition in the Lockerbee house, where Mary's two fuzzy boys roused the household with delighted shouts before the sun was up. An extravagant tree, shimmering in tinsel and strings of light, with mysterious bulky packages shelved by its lower branches. A roaring open fireplace—the smell of roast—the day was an angular female of and hateful affair at Georgia's . . .

ing turkey and mince pie— warmth and laughter and the inner glow which only contented love can bring. . . . Christmas at Mary's.

The Wilson house sported holly wreaths in all its plateglass windows. A long line of cars waited in the graveling driveway at first in response to Eunice's careless invitation to "come and have Christmas supper with us." The supper move often than not turned out to be a potluck of champagne. The great white drawing room the black and silver bridge room filled with a hilarious crowd some of whom had dandled Jack wisely but too well. Christmas at Eunice Wilson's was only a genuine for another party.

Christmas at the Palm Court Emporium was . . . A pale little boy played with a new electric train in the stuffy livingroom listening listlessly to his mother's and Christine's and Georgia De Haas's sole guest for only too certain age. A second cousin—or poor relation, despised in the days when Georgia was on the fringe of Lockwood society, a comfortable confidante when these lean years descended, if such was their fate, a fawning sycophant when her circumstances improved. Georgia had spent a dismal day with her. Her thin frame shook now with tense passion, her voice was hushed but shrilled.

Now that she landed Billy Sumner and his money Amy Carter has no more use for me. And Christine—Christine's always been under her feet. . . . Used me and threw me aside like an old rag. You'd think they'd have better manners. . . . All I have left is you, Mortense I'm hating it all! Being long as I can, but something ought to be done to Christine, I reckon! Some of these days I'll make them sorry they treated me like this . . ." Christmas, a dark Christmas in the Carter house . . . a rainy twilight outside and . . . Gay . . . gathering in the large dimly room. In an upstairs bedroom a small fire kindled in the grate and a baby girl sat writing a letter.

Dear Christmas dinner had been eaten at noontime. It was too soon after the Lockerbee's double celebration. The meal had been a tiresome affair— matter of fact, farm and heavy—delicious which no one really wanted. Stan had not appeared. Judy suspected he was at the Wilson's eggnog party. She didn't care . . . The girl took Christmas lightly. Really to have Stan there than to have him present and feel his dark eyes following her . . . her thoughts went far away from this silent room where the fire crackled and the rain lured the window pane. Far out across the ocean to the other side of the world. Nick on the other side of the world . . . an ocean rolling between them. He long would it hold. . . . How long would this deadlock . . . continue?

Wind and rain and the crackle of the fire. The feel of a great empty body of farm and heavy—dinner, the Chinese cook and Pon had departed to Celestial delights of San Francisco's china town. Keegan had driven Mrs. Carter over to the Lockerbee's. Judy herself had dismissed the upstairs girl. It seemed a shame to keep her from her family on Christmas day.

The wind lashed the eucalyptus trees against the window. The fire leaped as though in sudden terror. Waves of desperation and loneliness and vague empty noises within. Shadowy figures in the dancing light.

When I think of last Christmas Nick—" wrote Judy. "Down at the seaside house with Madame . . . The blue ocean and the sunshine like diamonds— and you dropping in out of the sky . . . You brought me Side-slip —do you remember? It's here now sleeping in front of the fire, I brought him up here for company. Remember how we walked up to the o'l railroad tunnel and you told me about the time you got mad and had eaten up so much of the family money? Just thinking of it I can remember the horror and damp it was in the mouth of the tunnel—how far away the sunlight outside world looked. And how tall and dependable you seemed. . . . I was so glad you were there beside me in that spooky place. I think I began to love you then, Nick, without really knowing it. You say that's when you first knew you loved me. . . . Last Christmas. And now this grey loneliness . . . I wonder what next year will bring . . ."

Judy's pen poised again, and her head tilted sharply. The sound of the front door closing with a bang which threatened to dislodge the leaded glass. Footsteps coming up the stairs. For some unknown reason the girl's heart began to pound and she thrust the half written sheet under the blotter of the writing-table. She had risen in an attitude of alarm when the door opened to frame the figure of Stan.

Stan's handsome dark face and slender figure smile . . . His was in tuxedo, slim and neat, his thick black hair brushed smoothly back, but Judy knew that he had been drinking heavily.

"Well, my " . . . His voice, the voice which could once send the hot blood leaping in Judy's veins, like sparkling wine and which now filled her with a strange unnamed dread. "A pathetic spectacle—to come alone her on Christmas day."

The girl continued to stand silently before him, eyes wide and watchful. Side-slip had roused and lay, head erect, ears alert watching the intruder.

"Is the model husband, Judith, my darling—" stan's mocking voice continuing, "I came back to lead you to the festivities. Get into your warpaint my love. The others await me."

"Where?" Judy's voice was expressionless.

"At Zonie's. The old man has loosened up to the tune of several hundred dollars of real champagne. I dropped in there from Amy's and I came to get you."

Judy's alert mind filled in the gap in his words. Stan would feel for convention's sake. Probably Eunice had sent him here for his wife—this in order to blind Wilson's jealous eyes. Her head went proudly up. Her jaw was set in a way which Nick would have recognized.

"I'm sorry. I'm not going, Stan."

Stan's eyes, narrowed to black slits. "May I ask why?" His voice continued calm.

"What's the use of camouflage. You know I detest Eunice and she also heartily dislikes me. And things are too beautiful between you and me. It's a lie. And I won't act a lie."

"My virtuous wife!" A silken menace in Stan's voice. "Rather stay home alone and write to your old lover, wouldn't you! Oh, yes— can see the letter under the blotter— you didn't cover it all up my dear! Well, suppose I got weary of this pretension. Suppose I decided to make my wife act —as a real wife to me . . ."

So quickly she had no remembrance of it—escaping the room, she found herself in Stan's arms. Found herself held hard against his breast, his mouth hard on her own.

Stan, speaking — his breath hot against her face. "No court will blame me for taking what is rightly her own —did you know that? Did you know I am my wife?"

A sudden wrench and Judy was away across the room, panting, face off with outstretched arms. "Get out of my house—" Her voice was a lash. "I hate you! Do you hear that—I hate you!"

It was like a nightmare. Stan there across the room, his handsome handling face, his pride, stricken to the quick. Herself pressed against the opposite wall, trembling with tense. And between them, bristling, fangs bared—Side-slip, roused to a sudden sense that his mistress was in distress had need of him.

"Pitch training the dog well, see! Quite an idea— gives you a hound to keep your husband away. And that will make selling to a judge, too, my wife! I'll tell it and see the effect if you try to get a divorce from me."

A moment later the door was slammed shut.

Judy locked it. She was packing until a late hour that night.

CHAPTER SEVENTY

And now once again Judy was in the city. But this time she knew she would never go back. She and Stan were in a deadlock. She could not go forward to happiness with him, he would never go back along that old road she had walked with Stan.

I never realized what she meant to me—it is almost unthinkable," she confessed to her smooth by herself up there in her own quarters, but now that she has gone, she seems so firm— something that held the household together is gone . . .

The pen paused over the paper, the fire was for a moment forgotten. Judy's sudden tears . . .

So lonely, this big house was . . . No one here gave herself . . . Nick, nearly after the mid-day dinner, the Chinese cook and Pon had departed to Celestial delights of San Francisco's china town. Keegan had driven Mrs. Carter over to the Lockerbee's. Judy herself had dismissed the upstairs girl. It seemed a shame to keep her from her family on Christmas day.

The wind lashed the eucalyptus trees against the window. The fire leaped as though in sudden terror. Waves of desperation and loneliness and vague empty noises within. Shadowy figures in the dancing light.

When I think of last Christmas Nick—" wrote Judy. "Down at the seaside house with Madame . . . The blue ocean and the sunshine like diamonds— and you dropping in out of the sky . . . You brought me Side-slip —do you remember? He's here now sleeping in front of the fire, I brought him up here for company. Remember how we walked up to the o'l railroad tunnel and you told me about the time you got mad and had eaten up so much of the family money? Just thinking of it I can remember the horror and damp it was in the mouth of the tunnel—how far away the sunlight outside world looked. And how tall and dependable you seemed. . . . I was so glad you were there beside me in that spooky place. I think I began to love you then, Nick, without really knowing it. You say that's when you first knew you loved me. . . . Last Christmas. And now this grey loneliness . . . I wonder what next year will bring . . ."

Judy's pen poised again, and her head tilted sharply. The sound of the front door closing with a bang which threatened to dislodge the leaded glass. Footsteps coming up the stairs. For some unknown reason the girl's heart began to pound and she thrust the half written sheet under the blotter of the writing-table. She had risen in an attitude of alarm when the door opened to frame the figure of Stan.

Stan's handsome dark face and slender figure smile . . . His was in tuxedo, slim and neat, his thick black hair brushed smoothly back, but Judy knew that he had been drinking heavily.

"Well, my " . . . His voice, the voice which could once send the hot blood leaping in Judy's veins, like sparkling wine and which now filled her with a strange unnamed dread. "A pathetic spectacle—to come alone her on Christmas day."

The girl continued to stand silently before him, eyes wide and watchful. Side-slip had roused and lay, head erect, ears alert watching the intruder.

"Is the model husband, Judith, my darling—" stan's mocking voice continuing, "I came back to lead you to the festivities. Get into your warpaint my love. The others await me."

"Where?" Judy's voice was expressionless.

"At Zonie's. The old man has loosened up to the tune of several hundred dollars of real champagne. I dropped in there from Amy's and I came to get you."

Judy's alert mind filled in the gap in his words. Stan would feel for convention's sake. Probably Eunice had sent him here for his wife—this in order to blind Wilson's jealous eyes. Her head went proudly up. Her jaw was set in a way which Nick would have recognized.

"I'm sorry. I'm not going, Stan."

Stan's eyes, narrowed to black slits. "May I ask why?" His voice continued calm.

"What's the use of camouflage. You know I detest Eunice and she also heartily dislikes me. And things are too beautiful between you and me. It's a lie. And I won't act a lie."

"My virtuous wife!" A silken menace in Stan's voice. "Rather stay home alone and write to your old lover, wouldn't you! Oh, yes— can see the letter under the blotter— you didn't cover it all up my dear! Well, suppose I got weary of this pretension. Suppose I decided to make my wife act —as a real wife to me . . ."

So quickly she had no remembrance of it—escaping the room, she found herself in Stan's arms. Found herself held hard against his breast, his mouth hard on her own.

Stan, speaking — his breath hot against her face. "No court will blame me for taking what is rightly her own —did you know that? Did you know I am my wife?"

A sudden wrench and Judy was away across the room, panting, face off with outstretched arms. "Get out of my house—" Her voice was a lash. "I hate you! Do you hear that—I hate you!"

It was like a nightmare. Stan— there across the room, his handsome handling face, his pride, stricken to the quick. Herself pressed against the opposite wall, trembling with tense. And between them, bristling, fangs bared—Side-slip, roused to a sudden sense that his mistress was in distress had need of him.

"Pitch training the dog well, see! Quite an idea— gives you a hound to keep your husband away. And that will make selling to a judge, too, my wife! I'll tell it and see the effect if you try to get a divorce from me."

A moment later the door was slammed shut.

Judy locked it. She was packing until a late hour that night.

CHAPTER SEVENTY

And now once again Judy was in the city. But this time she knew she would never go back. She and Stan were in a deadlock. She could not go forward to happiness with him, he would never go back along that old road she had walked with Stan.

That way of heartaches and ecstasy . . . And four patches of a young girl's dreams was barred forever.

Now she knew that love was not a matter of starlight and romantic passion. It was a thing of loyalty and warm deep respect. It was a thing of comradeship and passion, of sacrifice and reconsideration. It was a thing of absence and loneliness . . .

She had not left in a fit of headlong pride and outrage, as she had on many other occasions. Methodically, almost coldly, she had walked out of the Carter house and gone to the city flat which was to be her home for a time. Perhaps she had sent a man for her trunks and had them sent down.

She hunted for a small apartment in the city, and found a place which was suitable for she had taken side-slip with her. The dog was a great protection, and, in her loneliness; moreover, help seemed a thing to be desired.

Eventually she found a place where she could have him—not in the Marina district, but pleasant three room apartment where the windows gave a glimpse of fluttering blue bay and steamers gliding into the harbor through the Gate.

It was the view which decided Judy. It seemed to bring her nearer to the world of Nick. Knowing that blue path went the great white ships and gold steamers which reached China. Perhaps Nick's eyes would look out on that very bay she was watching now . . . A childish notion—but it brought comfort. Made the Pacific seem not quite so wide.

Very different this dwelling in the city from that other time thanks to Madame's generosity. She was no frightened and forlorn girl now. Resolute and hesitant . . . yet there were times when Judy thought wistfully, that timid other girl she had been, was the luckier of the two. At least she had been sure, even though she had fought desperately for life. Now Judy felt that she had passed into some strange country where life was suspended and only the form of things remained.

To wake in the morning and see the day stretch ahead like an endless grey ribbon . . . Why work when there was no need? It only kept some girl out of work . . . Judy could not do needed the support. Charity . . . No . . . She could give money, but she did not feel that she could give charity.

A strange empty time . . . sometimes she could not even feel real. Moments of panic—childish panic—when she closed her eyes and tried to recall his face and found that she could not do so.

The month would pass. She would sit up half the night writing to him —opening her heart.

Perhaps because she was no longer locked in the same room with Stan Nick wrote more freely—more at length. They grew to know each other's innermost minds very well. In those letters, perhaps more intimately than personal contact might have accomplished.

Letter from Summerfield were like letters from a lost world. Now and then Rosamond Curley wrote to her —cheerful tinfal gossip about the town she had once known people she had grown up among. It was much like picking up a book she had read long ago and half forgotten. She even the letter which came from Aunt Hetty's sister telling of the peaceful death of the old lady seemed really real. Aunt Hetty had raised an orphan girl long ago—a wistful romantic impulsive girl—a little dumb Judy now thought That had all been in another lifetime . . . Surely here was little about this placid and reserved young woman which recalled the Judy Channing of Summerfield.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating breakfast and ma said, I feel sort of restless this morning, I think I'll have my nails manicured and perhaps making more relaxing than a manicure, how do you explain that, Willyum?

Why ma, I said, I guess it's because I dont explain, pop said, and ma said, I'll call up the beauty parlor and see if Mrs Gladdis can come to my house at about eleven o'clock or so, I went go unless I want to, I said, Miss Gladdis.

Does she do a more lasting job on yer on a higher finish or something? pop said, and ma said, No, but she's the ony intriging one to take to. I think I'll let her put on a little more vivid tone this time. I tried Orchid Opal last time and it was just a tiny trifle too refined, or dont you think such a thing is possible, Willyum? she ast me.

I admit that Orchid Opal, by the color of it, is nothing like that I want to be seen with or remembered by, but I can ony speak for one sex, I says.

Meaning men, and ma said, Of course I dont mean I'd expose my nails to any of her more flaring tones such as her Ruby Red or even her Orange Cheer, but after all there's a happy compromise between being stared at and even being noticed, so I think perhaps I'll try her Sammon Silver that her Persimon Pink, what do you think, Willyum? and pop said, I think that the Sammon Silver on the left hand and Persimon Pink on the rite, and have I'd carefully noted which hand recieved the most approving glances, and that's the tone I want for the following application.

That's perposterous, ma said, and pop said, Then I'll give you an even more original ideer, and that is to show your hands in fists with not a vestige of any kind of polish on your nales. My deer, not a woman's eye will leave your hands as long as they're in atle, I said.

And that's just simply too impossible to deserve an answer, ma said. I think I'll just rest my laurels on Sammon Silver and think no more about it, she said, and pop said, I'll trust you to get it out of my thawts, too.

Wich it proberly was.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

A moment the lion eyed Tarzan and the girl, growled angrily and then looked down at the tempting meat. Presently he crouched upon his kill. The girl breathed a deep sigh of relief. She and the ape-man—

—continued their slow retreat. Just as they reached the jungle edge, a sudden clamorous overwhelmed Olga. She gave a cry and would have fallen, had not Tarzan caught her.

Quickly, the girl regained control of herself. "I could not help it," she said, in apology. "I was so close to such a horrible death, it unnerved me. I am all right now. How can I ever thank you? It was so wonderful—you did not seem——to fear that frightful creature, yet he was afraid for me. Who are you?"

"Tarzan, grimly. "That is why he fears me." He studied the girl closely. She was beautiful. Yet he only hated her.

NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

WALL STREET FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 5 (AP) — Wall Street's nerves were still a little jumpy today as bewilderment over the gold clause mess persisted. But Grains sagged along with equities and cotton held to a slim groove. Prime investment bonds gave no ground but secondary issues were irregular.

Shares of Homestake Mining dropped 7 points on a few transfers, Studebaker Preferred was off 3 and Bethlehem Steel Preferred lost more than 2. Others down a point or so included Pacific Lighting, Santa Fe, U. S. Steel Preferred, Inland Steel, Johns-Manville, Air Reduction and Allied Chemical.

In the Canadian section of the list Dome, McIntyre and Canadian Pacific eased, while Dominion Stores and International Nickel held about even. On the curb, steadiness ruled in Hiram Walker and Lake Shore. Dominion Government bonds were narrow. Canadian dollars were unchanged at 99.86⅝ cents.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 5 (CP)—The general sluggishness of the market was broken only by selling in Pickle Crow, Gunnar, Gold, God's Lake, Central Patricia and McWatters, but the dents effected in the price level were not important, recessions being limited to about three to four cents. The senior golds were quiet and firm to attract but base metals and allwers were unchanged and slow.

Brokers held there the $10.00 mark for a small gain and Lake Shore was fairly active at $50.50, unchanged. Several penny stocks were traded in volume including Roche at 8 cents, unchanged, and Chibougamau at 10 up ¼. Stadacona weakened moderately on considerable turnover.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 5 (CP)—The industrial section suffered from lack of buying support today, and traders continued to wait for the gold clause verdict. Nearly all the interlists. leaders dipped in the early session and firmed slightly in the early afternoon. Losses, however, predominated on very small turnover.

Nickel, Preferred "A", Distillers Seagrams and Imperial Oil recorded recessions on small fractions and Brazilian Traction was slightly steady. Bell Telephone was in demand at its high mark for a year at 136½ and the Quebec power stocks were unchanged.

Consolidated Smelters pushed up 1¼ despite the general weakness.

NEW YORK CLOSE

New York, Feb. 5.—(AP)—Gold clause qualms continued to assail market traders today and prices, generally, sagged to lower levels. Dropping Monday through seven points, Studebaker preferred was off 3 and U.S. Steel, American Telephone, Du Pont, Pan Pacific and General Motors declined fractionally to around a point. Transfers approximated 878,000 shares.

Q. But you think he was home at six o'clock, wasn't he and you came home from Hauptmann's and got his supper?

A. Oh, no.

Q. Do you remember telling the Bronx police nobody drove you home that night?

A. Oh, that's a lie.

The witness said Hauptmann had taken the phone.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 5.— Bruno Richard Hauptmann, defendant, denying he was the man who collected the $50,000 ransom, testified on April 2, 1933 used the testimony of a Bronx taxi driver today that he was not there when were four mysterious persons near St. Raymond's cemetery in the Bronx at the time of the payment.

Phillip Moses, who had been called as saying that Hauptmann "bust this case wid open" testified he spoke to the latter shortly after 8 pm. April 2, 1933, and drove them past the gate of the cemetery where the body of Jafsie Condon said he paid Hauptmann the ransom money while Colonel Lindbergh waited in an auto.

Four Men in Conference

He said he saw the three men two blocks past the gate. They stopped when he had, and with a fourth man whereupon the quartett huddled for a conference.

Then the car got into a gray car which stalled, he said and he helped them to get it started.

Moses was not allowed to testify to something he said one of the men had told him.

Another alibi witness followed the defendant to the stand, Mueller, Mrs. Hauptmann's niece, testified Hauptmann was at his house for a birthday party on the night of Nov. 26, 1933, when a fleeing kidnapper was preferred Dr. Condreigh ransom bill in payment for a ticket.

Huntington, N.J., Feb. 5.—Attorney Benjamin Hefter testified today he saw Isador Fisch accused key witness for the state, and Hauptmann of being the collector of the Lindbergh ransom money, leap from a wall at St. Raymond's cemetery the night of April 2, 1933, the time of the payment by Dr. John F. Condon.

J.E. SHORTT TO HEAD ANGLERS

Officers of Last Year Are Re-elected in Body

Steadily increasing in numbers and generally flourishing the Belleville Anglers' Association announced their slate of officers for 1935, nine names having been submitted at the annual meeting in the office of President Ross Ketcham, which was held last evening. Only one contest developed, that of the vice-presidency, and resulted in the election of J. E. Shortt, who will serve with Harold Legate being named as vice-president and Mr. G. A. C. Wells, secretary-treasurer.

Many recommendations were presented and passed with the idea in mind of bettering game fishing in the waters of Hastings County, and a letter from the Ontario Game and Fisheries Department of the Ontario Government regarding that all possible game fish waters in the county be surveyed by a government official, to investigate early this spring, with the added suggestion, that all possible waters be re-stocked with game fish. This question was thoroughly discussed by the executive committee before the letter of recommendation was drafted to be sent to the fishery department.

In the near future the annual lectures and educational moving picture demonstrations relating to game fishing will be resumed and thrown open to all interested in the angling sport, and a casting and plug and fly casting competitions will resume in the Armouries. It will be concluded with a demonstration by local and expert casters from the Toronto Anglers' Club. The usual summer competitions will be held again this year.

President—J. E. Shortt.
Vice-President—Harold Legate.
Secretary-Treasurer — G. A. C. Wells.
Executive Committee—Dr. Van Blaricom, Capt. H. H. Bottum, G. Delaney, F. O. Pilling and R. Wess.
Chairman of Committees:
Casting Committee—R. H. Brown.
Re-Stocking Committee — Dr. Blaricom.

Casting Competition—F. O. Pilling.
Programme Committee—Harold Legate.

MEISNER WITH 2 MEN BUYING CHAIN

tified of a police line-up in Detroit this morning. Meisner was not in. The process was termed "a W and W" in the "argot" according.

Questioned said he had photographs of suspects from both Toronto and Detroit police.

Detroit police the four witnesses to Detroit he had handed them over to Inspector Elmer Gardiner of the Ontario force.

The witness chief found Hammond's name was not listed on the indictment.

"That was not investigating the case," said Hammond.

"Wait a minute. Didn't you previously take some pictures of suspects living in the Muskoka district"

He said he had.

"Did you call that investigating?"

"Not exactly."

He told of showing photographs to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Evelyth, Mrs. Mary Lythe and Lee.

Mrs. Evelyth had found one photo which looked like the man who had rented the cottage, but later decided not.

Bell handed the inspector two double police photos which had been filed as exhibits.

"Were any of these photographs shown to those people?"

"Yes, sir, I had a single, very much older picture."

Hammond continued in detail regarding the photographs in an attempt to elicit which picture the witnesses had identified prior to making the position. Hammond could not say definitely. The first picture he had shown them but he could not say which picture they identified.

Malthas Harrison, living in the Muskoka district, was the next witness.

He was handed a picture of four cottages on the shore of Lake Lesmond. One was the cottage of Horace Lee, which the prisoner is alleged to have rented.

"I saw the prisoner in the afternoon," he said.

"Where was he walking?"

"Across Mr. Cruse's cottage to watch Mr. Frowse's cottage."

Peculiarity of Walk

He said he noticed the man had a peculiar walk.

Harrison had believed the Frowse cottage was vacant and was surprised to see a stranger walking to it.

Later he had been brought to London by police officers where he identified Meisner as the man he saw Aug. 13, the day after Labatt was stabbed.

Howard Cluff, K.C., questioned the carpenter regarding the "line up."

Harrison said he didn't know all his working hours logged in his book. He had other books at home, he said.

Cluff pointed all entries were not made in the book with the same pencil. The day he saw the man, Harrison had had marked the entry in darker writing, Cluff observed.

Harrison took the book among the papers.

"How many did you see on the property this day?"

"Only this man."

"You say he was a stranger?"

"Yes."

"And did you tell Mr. German that when you saw a stranger you usually told you could work for him or sell him something?"

"Yes, that's right."

"And you told this man?"

"No, he didn't speak to me and I didn't speak to him."

Made No Report.

He didn't tell anyone about hearing seen the stranger on the property, not even the police after the kidnapping, Harrison told the defence counsel.

Hammond also questioned regarding the police line-up he had viewed in London. He had recognized the accused but could not describe any other prisoners in the parade.

Proceedings to the day he had seen Meisner, Harrison said the man impressed the Frowse cousin but he had not seen him enter.

He did not see him at any other time.

The "time book" was looked at by the witness and handed by Cluff to Mr. Justice G. F. McFarland.

Cluff wanted to show your lordship how the accounts skip from May to August," said defence counsel.

The witness then stepped down.

CHINESE IN CITY OBSERVE HOLIDAY

No Great Celebration Seen as New Year's Day Passes

Although Monday was Chinese New Year's Day in the city, there was little actual observance of the holiday in the city. It was simply a holiday for the Chinese in the laundrymen, and meals on time in the Chinese-owned restaurants.

Although Toronto Chinese did enter into the spirit of celebration in an uncertain manner, in the smaller cities of Ontario the week-long festivities are made itself felt. Like the queue, the old time customs of the Chinese who have left the residence in this country have died with the passing years.

Conflicting reports exist as to the exact year in the Chinese calendar. 4633 is now being celebrated. A dispatch from New York stated that the year is 4,639, although other Chinese agents agree that it is the year 2,485, reckoned on the birthday of Confucius. The exact name of the present year would be the 25th year of the Republic of China.

'S. A.' CELEBRATES 51ST ANNIVERSARY

Adjutant Carl Hiltz of Kingston Conducts Services

The fifty-first anniversary services of the Citadel Corps or the Salvation Army were worthily commemorated over the week-end. Special services in charge were conducted by Adjutant Carl Hiltz, the Commanding Officer of Kingston Corps, and his ministry was widely appreciated by the Citadel congregations all through the day.

Additional to the anniversary celebrations all the usual Sunday features of interest were introduced, the reading of the year's financial statement for officership, who have entered the service during the past years, also the names of seventy-five Corps' officers who have commanded the local corps since its founding in history. Most sacred of all, was the annual remembrance of Promotion to Glory" hymn, and triumphed through grace and entered into Heavenly rest.

In the afternoon service a musical programme was given by the Citadel Band and Songster Brigade, and the Young People's Band and singing company.

Last evening an anniversary Musical Festival was provided by the Songster Brigade, Band, Songster Brigade, and interest was created as they rendered a very fine record now available is 45 years. Adjutant and Mrs. Hiltz, S. W. Major Hiltz presided over the Festival gathering last night.

FARM LOAN PLAN APPLICABLE TO ALL PROVINCES

Centralize Operations of Plan Under Federal Direction

LEGION GIVEN GRANT

Definite Plan For Drought Areas Advanced by Mr. Weir

Ottawa, Feb. 5.—(CP)—Plans for placing the Canadian farmer in a stronger financial position as embodied in amendments to extend the scope of the Canadian Farm Loan Act await second reading in the House of Commons following a second day of debate yesterday. Even as the measure left the House the Government's scheme to centralize the operations of the Farm Loan scheme under Federal Government auspices, make it applicable to all provinces and increase the amount of money available for loans from $15,000,000 to $90,000,000, received approval.

There were a few misgivings, however, as to what the policy of government lending would lead to and a few demands for a reduction in interest rates from six to four per cent. The latter would mean that the government would have to bear the cost of administering the Farm Loan scheme. The government pays the money at four per cent. and now lends it at six per cent., two per cent. margin taking care of administration costs and loss of bad debts.

Hon. E. N. Rhodes, Minister of Finance, agreed with several opposition members that the real issue in the question of debate as to whether the interest rate should be reduced. He intimated the government would give consideration to the proposals. The aim of the plan, he said, is to help contented farmers on the land. Governments as a rule were inefficient money-lenders but he believed it was better to risk possible losses than to have farmers lose their land and become dependent.

A definite plan for dealing with the drought-stricken areas of the Prairie provinces has been worked out, Minister of Agriculture Robert Weir told the House early in yesterday's session. The plan envisaged study the government has decided to attempt to change the farming methods in an area of some 10,000,000 acres.

Didn't you investigate thoroughly a man who bought a car, took $50,000 and passed it over a wall or a bush in an unfrequented road to effect the conditions in the area. In some instances ranching alone will be encouraged, in others grain growing alone and in other mixed farming.

REQUEST CHEAPER RATES

Mr. Weir's statement on the matter was devoted to Mr. Weir's answers to Mr. Donnelly (Dauphin) and Mr. Gardiner (Melfort) on the Farm Loan Act amendments in connection with the whole of the preliminary resolution. The amendments received first reading at the end of the afternoon session.

Two veteran western farmers while commending the measure sounded warning notes. Hon. W. R. Motherwell, former Minister of Agriculture, said he did not like to see the government embarking on a large lending scheme but saw no other alternative. The scheme, he believed, should be accompanied by inauguration of improved methods of farming so that the farmers could liquidate their debts. Mortgages on top of mortgages would never get the farmers out of their difficulties and there was a danger of the land finally falling into the hands of the government; somewhat the same idea was presented by Mr. J. H. A. Wilson (Saskatoon-Humboldt), who warned there were men

Interest of Condon in Cure, Welfare, Brought Out

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 6.—At the Hauptmann trial on Tuesday afternoon John S. Seykora, inspector of the Department of Justice, identified his report on investigation of the ransom money paid in St. Raymond's Cemetery, E. J. Reilly, defence counsel, was questioning Seykora.

"Dr. Condon (the intermediary) told us he went back several days later to look for the box in which the ransom was delivered," Seykora testified.

Q. Did you have alienists examine Dr. Condon? A. I don't know.

Q. Have you ever seen a report of any examination? A. No, sir.

Q. Have you any information of that fact?

Wilentz objected, "it is not a fact." Reilly continued the query at length about the extent of the investigation of Jafsie by the police.

"Didn't you investigate thoroughly a man who brought, took $50,000 and passed it over a wall or a bush in an unfrequented road to effect the conditions in the area. In some instances ranching alone will be encouraged, in others grain growing alone and in other mixed farming.

EXPECT THREE REPORTS ON PROBE

Mass Buying Commission Busy Indexing Evidence

Ottawa, Feb. 6—(CP)—Members of the Royal Commission on Price Spreads and Mass Buying were delving into a mountainous heap of exhibits and records, analyzing statistics, studying evidence and comparing notes preparatory to writing their report—or reports.

It was believed a majority and two minority reports may emerge from the commission's examination of all the documents will occupy about three weeks, chairman W. W. Kennedy said.

For some time the Commission, however, has had members of its clerical staff indexing evidence and questioning testimony presented by more than 200 witnesses, who appeared in the course of its 123 sitting days.

Exhibits are greatly varied" ranging from bills of sale for bits of cloth, packages of dried peas to learned dissertations written by experts on different aspects of commercial activity. Payrolls, charts, graphs, governmental reports and statistical data relating to bacon, tobacco, furniture, bread, ploughs, soap, gasoline, silk, tomatoes and almost every other conceivable article of trade united the commission's record of exhibits.

Established as a Parliamentary Committee last February, the Commission was elevated to the status of a Royal Commission in July, beginning its work where the Parliamentary Committee left off. Throughout its existence its personnel never changed. Its members are Hon. E. H. Stevens, Former Minister of Trade and Commerce, five conservative men; Jean Sir of the House of Commons, W. W. Kennedy of Winnipeg South, and M. McLaren of Waterloo South. Mark C. Senn, Haldimand. Thomas Bell, Saint John, Albert and J. A. Barbeau, Champlain; Four Liberal members, J. L. Ilsley, Hantsport Dominion, Toronto West Center, F. J. Young, Weyburn and O. B. Boulanger, Bellechasse. The Progressive Group in the Commons had a representative, D. H. Kennedy of Peace River.

Mr. Stevens was chairman of the Parliamentary Committee and when the Royal Commission succeeded it he was appointed Chairman of that body. However, last October before the Commission drew to a close Mr. Stevens, having resigned his portfolio, also resigned his chairmanship.

FURTHER ARRESTS IN LABATT CASE EXPECTED HOURLY

Some Canadians Included in List of Suspects

By CHARLES MOLLOY

London, Ont., Feb. 6 (CP)—Further arrests of accessories in the kidnapping of John S. Labatt, wealthy London brewer, are expected by the Ontario authorities during the coming week.

Norman Newton, K.C., crown attorney of London, told the Canadian Press last night that arrests of ten men, recently connected with the kidnapping, and a "number of others" who harbored, aided or abetted the abductors, were expected during the next seven days.

Money Shown Must be Proved Ransom Money

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 6.—(AP) Evan Miller testified today that a no floorboard "as missing from Bruno Richard Hauptmann's attic in August 1932.

Wilentz objected again to "taking from the mouth of a dead man and bringing into his court, words which it is impossible to meet and which he knows is impossible to meet".

I say it is material and it is competent to show — and we have charged here in the defence repeatedly —that this money was in the possession of Fisch and the box that he gave to Hauptmann, Hauptmann has testified he left with him, that it contained money, which afterwards people have demonstrated here contained notes that had been registered as part of the Lindbergh money.

"Now it is unfortunate that Mr. Fisch died but still it is part of our case, we contend, to show Fisch was going around New York after the ransom money had been paid by Dr. (John F. "Jafsie") Condon, exhibiting gold bills to different people and trying to exchange them with different people and that he had the pocket of the prosecution," he said.

Justice Thomas W. Trenchard ruled, at a conference before his bench just before declaring the recess, that the defence should be free to show, that the money Fisch had exhibited in Manhattan to Bruchmann was actually ransom money.

Otherwise, the court said, Hauptmann's attorneys would have to abandon their line of defence.

SIZE STANDARDIZATION FAVORED IN LUMBER

ANNIVERSARY OF 'BLOODY TUESDAY' IS RIOTOUS AFFAIR

France For The French Battle Cry of Students

PREMIER IS JEERED

Red Paint is Splashed Around as a Reminder

By ROBERT M. PARKER

Copyright, 1935,
By The Associated Press

Paris, Feb. 6.—Violence followed today on a religious observance of the first anniversary of "Bloody Tuesday" as hooting youths clashed with police within sight of Notre Dame cathedral.

Bell also questioned whether there had been an actual kidnapping under the rule of justice and attacked Labatt's identification of Meisner as one of the three abductors.

The defence suddenly rested its case at court opening, after two witnesses for Meisner failed to show up.

Leroy Hall and Albert Seltzer, police detectives from Covington, Ky., were reported to have returned to the United States.

When court opened Asst. Justice G. P. McFarland said to defence chief C. W. Bell:

"You were examining a witness when court adjourned yesterday, Mr. Bell."

"Yes, my lord," was the reply. "Where is he now?"

"I don't know, my lord. I learned today that he and another Covington detective, who was also to be called as a witness in this case had left their hotel. I saw this from newspaper reports, which was the first I had learned of the incident ...that the two men had crossed the border into the United States. I will agree to having a sheriff's officer follow these men on the strength of the original subpoena if the court desires it."

"I want to make it clear," continued Bell, "that I had no contact whatsoever with these men outside of court, and when the witness took the stand yesterday it was the first I had seen of him."

Mr. Justice McFarland: "Are you prepared to submit the jury?"

Bell: "I would like 15 minutes to prepare my notes."

Court recessed for 15 minutes.

Says Two Men 'Hatted'

Bell addressed the jury after recess. He referred t. Leroy Hall and Albert Seltzer who took French leave.

"Naturally that must be of great importance to you in considering any evidence you heard from that source."

"You may consider looking at the matter as a whole, that those two men have taken to their heels."

It would be a possible conclusion, he said, to decide that the two men let down the prisoner in order to protect some higher person responsible for the crime with which Meisner is charged.

Regardless of what happens, we are here to determine, whether or not under the law of Justice, a crime has been committed and whether the man accused is responsible."

Bell described the accused as a "simple, unsophisticated man."

"This man is not before this court on bootlegging charges, but before this court as a man charged with a

LANCASTER HOLDS LEGISLATIVE SEAT

Justices Find Corrupt Practices Not in Vogue

Toronto, Feb. 6—(CP)—Mr. Justice W. E. Middleton and Mr. Justice J. A. Hope in Osgoode Hall today dismissed both the petition of James Hawthorne for the voiding of the election of T. P. Lancaster as member of the Ontario Legislature for Peterborough and the cross-petition of Magnus Lyle Ernest S. Mitchell and Joseph Gregson directed against Hawthorne.

G. N. Gordon, K.C., acting for Hawthorne, pointed out notice of intention to withdraw the petition and cross-petition had been served on the solicitors. Counsel for both Hawthorne and the cross-petitioners then stated that they had obtained sufficient evidence to proceed.

Mr. Justice Middleton stated it was, consequently, the duty of the court to report that corrupt practices did not exist in the Peterborough constituency. It was ruled that each side of the case pay its share of the costs of the litigation.

$200,000 REVENUE LOST BY METHODS

Kingsville, Feb. 6 (CP)—Elimination of competitive selling from the tobacco auction floors would mean an additional revenue to growers of at least $200,000 a year, without materially affecting consumers' prices, declared Hubert C. Scott, Kingsville, after addressing a meeting of the early fruit and vegetable growers of Essex County on the advantages of working under the Natural Products Marketing Act.

"Under the present system, buyers' shipping would also mean money in the pocket of the producer," he said.

By a standing vote of 123 to 25 the growers favored immediate action on a plan for regulation of their field tomatoes, early beans in pod, early cabbage and early sweet corn through the agency of the Act. An amendment to the motion which asked for a six months hoist of the matter pending further investigation was easily defeated.

The vote directed that petition among the 2,000 growers in Essex and Kent counties, requesting the Act be applied to their agriculture to approve of the scheme.

Men 'Ratted' on Meisner Says Defence Counsel Of Witnesses' Departure

Asks Jury to Acquit Accused Man of Charge

WHAT IS KIDNAPPING?

"Delightful Affair" Comments Bell of Stay at Lake

London, Ont., Feb. 6 (CP)—C. W. Bell, K.C., chief of defence counsel for David Meisner, charged with kidnapping John S. Labatt, closed his address to the jury today before leaving on an engagement after a dramatic morning opening of court.

Bell questioned whether there had been an actual kidnapping under the rule of justice and attacked Labatt's identification of Meisner as one of the three abductors.

The defence suddenly rested its case at court opening, after two witnesses for Meisner failed to show up.

Leroy Hall and Albert Seltzer, police detectives from Covington, Ky., were reported to have returned to the United States.

When court opened Asst. Justice G. P. McFarland said to defence chief C. W. Bell:

"You were examining a witness when court adjourned yesterday, Mr. Bell."

"Yes, my lord," was the reply. "Where is he now?"

"I don't know, my lord. I learned today that he and another Covington detective, who was also to be called as a witness in this case had left their hotel. I saw this from newspaper reports, which was the first I had learned of the incident ...that the two men had crossed the border into the United States. I will agree to having a sheriff's officer follow these men on the strength of the original subpoena if the court desires it."

"I want to make it clear," continued Bell, "that I had no contact whatsoever with these men outside of court, and when the witness took the stand yesterday it was the first I had seen of him."

Mr. Justice McFarland: "Are you prepared to submit the jury?"

Bell: "I would like 15 minutes to prepare my notes."

Court recessed for 15 minutes.

Says Two Men 'Hatted'

Bell addressed the jury after recess. He referred t. Leroy Hall and Albert Seltzer who took French leave.

"Naturally that must be of great importance to you in considering any evidence you heard from that source."

"You may consider looking at the matter as a whole, that those two men have taken to their heels."

It would be a possible conclusion, he said, to decide that the two men let down the prisoner in order to protect some higher person responsible for the crime with which Meisner is charged.

Regardless of what happens, we are here to determine, whether or not under the law of Justice, a crime has been committed and whether the man accused is responsible."

Bell described the accused as a "simple, unsophisticated man."

"This man is not before this court on bootlegging charges, but before this court as a man charged with a

ROEBUCK COMMENTS

Story of Prospective Arrests Refuted by Attorney General

TORONTO, Feb. 6. — (CP) — Supervision of the conduct of the prosecution at the trial of David Meisner on a charge of kidnapping John S. Labatt has been ordered by the Ontario Attorney General A. W. Roebuck and W. B. Common, Senior Solicitor in the Department, will be sent to London to act in that capacity Mr. Roebuck announced today.

The Attorney General's action followed a despatch from London in which Norman F. Newton, Acting Crown Attorney for Middlesex County and Associated with J. C. M. German as Crown Counsel, was quoted as saying "within two weeks will clean up the entire gang and when we do we intend to round not only the actual kidnappers but all who have aided the kidnappers by concealing them in any way or by being accessories before or after the crime itself."

The Attorney General issued a formal statement commenting on Mr. Newton's reported announcement and then he announced Mr. Common would be sent to London to supervise the case.

"In the event you are sending Mr. Common to London because you are dissatisfied with Mr. Newton" the Attorney General was asked.

The Superintendent of Provincial Police in the newspaper statement is such that special supervision seems necessary," was Mr. Roebuck's only comment.

Canadian Labor Body Recommends Change in Contribution

Ottawa, Feb. 6—(CP)—Spokesmen for the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada today voiced unqualified approval in general of the government's unemployment and social insurance scheme but suggested several changes in the measure, including reductions in the contributions and diminution of those by employers.

Is suggested similar changes in other contributions.

Period of Contribution

The Congress also asked that the 40-week contributory period was too long and that it would debar many workers from benefits in periods of the scheme. The bill calls for contributions amounting to 40 weeks before a worker becomes eligible for benefits. At the same time it asked the section setting a 78-day period for reception of benefits be lengthened.

The meeting of the Belleville Gunners' Club last evening was one of the most successful since the formation of the club, as guest speaker of the evening, Lt. Roscoe Vanderwater, interested the Col. Vanderwater particularly stressed the close co-operation of the artillery and infantry units through the terrific "scraps" on the fields of Flanders and through the Somme.

The meeting was presided over by president of the Gunners' Club, Fred Wigins who conveyed the few half of the clubs his thanks to Col. Vanderwater for his entertaining talk.

Constable James Lovelace today reported the incident and forwarded a description of the missing person to local and Provincial Police. The missing person is J. A. He is described as being a man about five feet, eight inches tall and was wearing dark rimmed glasses and driving a 1930 model Buick sedan painted blue and bearing Ontario licence plates—W-8165. No reason for his leaving home was considered but local police were asked to endeavour locating this person.

Activities in local police circles were at a rather low ebb during the past 24 hours, no arrests being made or reports of motor accidents necessary, despite the fact, that driving conditions are rather hazardous owing to icy pavements within the city limits, being reported on the provincial highways are reported to be excellent.

Only four transients applied at the police station for a warm night's lodging last night, the smallest number to sleep in the cell block this month.

Glamour of Southland Delightfully Portrayed by Kinsmen in Showboat Days

Glamour of the Southland in the days when show boats plied their merry way along the Mississippi was captured in "Show Boat Days", the musical comedy presented for the first time last night by the Kinsmen Club of the city to a very large audience in the Collegiate auditorium. The splendid reception accorded the production augurs for the success of the great group to make its debut on the amateur stage in the city.

Modern and laughter, gay belles and handsome beaux, colorful costumes and distinctive scenery all helped to launch the Show Boat on evening's cruise that was a happy occasion for everyone. While a romantic story, usually a secondary matter in musical comedy, was cleverly introduced to add still another interest to the delightful presentation.

Production Excellent

Produced by the Canadian Production Company of Hamilton, the entire production was staged and rehearsed by Mr. George Zarfas, his merit is high praise for the success of the presentation, its swiftly moving scenes and grace.

The musical score by Miss Ova Oven, with original themes and favourite melodies made a most fitting setting for the comedy while the sympathetic support of the orchestra under the direction of Mr. Clifford Templer kept the production in a fast moving tempo.

The costumes were brilliant and were provided by the Anne Elliott Studios.

The entertainment not only presented well known soloists but brought to the attention of a delighted audience many singers with very pleasing voices, who have hitherto kept their gifts a secret.

Story of Show Boat

"Show Boat Days" pictured the arrival of this unique craft with a cargo of entertainment for the townspeople along the river shore. This particular Show Boat was owned by Jeff Dillard, a home town boy, who had made a good name for himself on entering the home port to claim his sweetheart, Julie Bellew with an art in spite of her shrewish mother, who is determined to look upon the "bounder" with suspicion. Many complications, in true musical comedy style, but with a happy ending, in the play is swept to a triumphant ending in sales of mirth and music, the audience being entertained by the guests at a Show Boat performance, "Dillard's Honey Bee Minstrel Show."

The Characters

Mrs. P. J. McKee took the part of Aunt Jinny, who recounted the plot of the comedy in style and who, as the play continued, had many amusing lulls with the amusing Lightnin', Miss Alice McIntosh was a charming heroine, and in her graceful old fashioned frocks with the very picture of a Southern belle of long ago. Jefferson Dillard was her faithful sweetheart, a character played with fine feeling by Stan Wilbur.

Other principals of the cast divided into comedy roles. Col. Andrew Stewart, a very brow beaten husband, was amusingly portrayed by Jack Darlington as a very hard man when his wife was not around. Col. Stewart was in league with the young lovers and promised that if the Show Boat's revue were a success they could be married. Miss Catharine Smith, a talented comedienne, gave a splendid performance as Andy's wife and flounced about the stage in tantrums most of the time.

Sylvia Tett as the petite wife of Sammy, a Show Boat employe and Gardner Duff in the latter role kept the audience in chuckles with their antics, and their interpretation of "Ten Tweni' Thirt" melodrama was priceless.

Lightnin' (Norm Garbutt) and Midnight (Bill McIntosh), made another effective comedy team and people are still trying to figure out the amazing arithmetic problem so adroitly explained by Midnight.

Backwoodsmen Enjoy Show

The actions of Bob Graham and Carl Sills as two towering backwoodsmen who came to see the Dillard's revue, and who settled themselves in a box, fortifying themselves with huge sandwiches, peanuts, pipes, added to the fun of the evening.

Joe Dookes was the Sheriff, who could hardly be seen behind his large hadjs and "does only serving" seemed to be the supporting of Mrs. Amelia Stewart when she decided to swoon away.

The first act centred about the arrival of the Show Boat and the curtain rises as a chorus of belles and dandies of the town welcomed the Show Boat whose how could be seen in the attractive stage setting. The lovely feminine costumes of crinoline days and the smart suits with stocks and wrist frills worn by the dandies, made the stage a kaleidoscope of colour.

"If this act were introduced solo by Miss McIntosh, duets by which were blended the splendid voices of Miss McIntosh and Stan Wilbur, with the ensemble taking up the choruses.

Scene Two took place on the foredeck of the box office and provided a setting for the amusing Effie and Julie Bellew specialties.

This part of the program included a solo "The Sun is My Heart" by Bill McIntosh and a tuneful lament by Col. Abby, "Don't do That", the girls assisting in the chorus.

The Show Boat parade a traditional in Show Boat times, with the village square and the sample of the show's offering was provided in a variety of numbers including.

Stopped The Show

"Solo Dance", Mary Forster; solo, "That's Why Darkies were Born", Harold Davidson; "Dance Specialty" Madaline Anne Walden; "Glad Rag Doll". The Belles; "Finale" Entire Ensemble; solo, "Ol' Man River" Harold Barrett; solo, "Dark Town Strutter's Ball", Bob Clare.

Mary Fowler's smart dancing "stopped the show" in this act.

The Show Boat revue Leslie Pearsall as a splendid interlocutor. Clem Allen, Clayton Darroh, Bill McIntosh and Jack Norris as comedians and Milton Davidson, Arnold Bryant, Angus McPhee, Donald Keel, Harvey Toss, Raymond Arnott, Jack Morgan, Godfrey Boyd, Ernie Scott, Charles Wood, William Hurst, Gardner Duff, James Andrews, as minstrel men.

The program met with warm applause by the audience, the "Hats on the Side of My Head", in which Raymond Brods took the lead, by Leslie as entertainer and Gardner Duff's "Pretty Polly Perkins", receiving special acclaim. Other numbers of which were presented in splendid style included:

Minstrel Opening. The boys; "I Ain't Stark"; Bill McIntosh and Girls; "Alice's Wonderful Dream", Arnold Bryant; "Waltin' at the Ones for Me", Clarence Church; "She's on the Side of My Head" Raymond Arnott; "Darkies My Southern Parent", William Hurst; "Pretty Polly Perkins", Sammy; Minstrel Finale, The Boys; "Sweet Lady Be Ours at Wedding", Jinny, Lightnin' and Company.

The wedding finale introducing a lovely wedding procession for Virginia and Jeff Dillard, was a pretty scene, The farewell, with the lights of the Show Boat disappearing in the distance was a clever touch.

Judging from the enthusiasm of the audience, tonight's performance should see a full house.

OPEN MEETING AT KIWANIS LUNCHEON

Activity Reports From Various Chairmen Received

Reports from the various chairmen of committees of the Kiwanis Club were received at an open meeting held in the Quinte Hotel and if enthusiasm and worthwhile effort is any criterion, and the fact that a full house was present during the coming year and leave a record on the community life of this city.

Cliff Barrager in the chair, did not prolong the discussion to lag and several times two or three members were called upon to speak, to join in the discussion and offer ideas for the betterment of the club. Frank Pinkle, group leader, did not have much success in this line with the result that everyone joined in singing the songs so well known in the club, while a few were anxious to give their votes a try on the new songs, that Leo B. Riggs and Bill Meyers sang as accordion duet, produced. Pines were in order for this procedure and George Lee was a busy man.

George Perham, in charge of the "Observance of Special Days and Occasions" at the Hastings County Children's Shelter, announced that their attendance, the artists for their contributions and Mr. Sandercock, who will also be entertained at the close of the concert. The club was in favor of again visiting the hospital and passing out magazines, candies and smokes. Jack Thompson was appointed head of this committee and he will set the day, when the members are to bring their contributions.

Chester Smith as Chairman of Finance, gave an exposition of where the dues went and asked the members to be more prompt in payment. Negotiations are continuing for the pro. hockey match game to be held soon to be received from the Minto Skating Club of Ottawa and until this is received no arrangements can be made for the proposed skating carnival. It has been almost decided to have another "gala of scenes with a car as the chief prize and Eddie Shapiro, Cliff Barrager, Gordon Bray, Phil McKee, Merlin Wicket and Leo Riggs are the committee in charge. Frank Bray gave a report on attendance showing a decided increase with a number of the members having 100 percent since the first of the year. He showed the attendance in 1933 to be 74 percent; in 1934, 77 percent, with 83 percent in 1935.

Employment Luncheon Planned

A meeting is being arranged by Bill Cook, Chairman of Business Standards, to have each businessman bring a friend to the luncheon to the luncheon. A speaker will give an address on the relationship of employer and employee. Eddie Logan told the club the object of the meeting was primarily was to have a total of 50 before the end of the year and asked for the cooperation of the members to this end. Ernie Pinkle praised the service given by the boys at the luncheon time and the waitresses for their kindness in their capacity. P. C. MacLaurin asked the members to carry out the instructions of the Lieutenant-Governor and help some underprivileged boy, but to keep it "under their hat". Eddie Shapiro believed that inter club visits were the life of any club and informed the members a visit had been arranged with West Toronto, the latter part of May. Picton Club will be guests at the end of the month.

The program committee has certainly laid out an extensive plan and the members are in for many a treat during the year; according to Herb Fox, Frank Quinnette's report that a scene to be held on the 14th and hoped every member would be in attendance. It was suggested that bridge be part of the program for those who didn't dance and the suggestion was adopted. The committee plan some real stunts and it will be one of the social affairs of the season but the dance is informal, the McIntosh also reported on the welfare work with some good news to come later. An achievement committee of Phil McKee, Tim McCann, Albert Boynton, and Ross Silver was appointed by the President.

It is more than likely the club will sponsor a movement which will extend throughout the Province to have the purchase of motor licenses set at a different time, than the last date "Jay" This will be further discussed when the resolution is brought before the club in concrete form.

Q. What kind of an investigation of Dr. Condon did you make. Wasn't everybody connected with the case investigated? A. (No answer)

Case Mixed Up.

Q. Now isn't it a fact that in a case of this kind everyone is under suspicion? A. We try to keep our minds open.

Q. Did any one in Washington from the president down ever call your hand in the investigation of Dr. Condon? A. Not in the slightest.

Q. As far as you know? A. Yes.

In a very brief re-cross Wilentz asked if the federal investigation of Jafsie had not developed he was a patriotic citizen, highly interested in civic and welfare matters in the Bronx.

The inquiry he said had developed that information on Condon's character.

FURTHER ARRESTS IN LABATT CASE EXPECTED HOURLY

"chief" of the ring believed responsible for the kidnapping of the brewery president had been arrested was denied by the commissioner.

Only David Meisner, now on trial here for his alleged part in the abduction, and Kingston Pen Warden held in Covington, Ky., pending extradition proceedings, were held in custody at present, he said.

The others who were believed actively involved in the kidnapping, however, would be arrested next week according to police expectations.

Still other men who allegedly aided the kidnappers while they laid plans for the abduction in London, would also be arrested, he said. "During the coming week we expect to pull a number of scoops in to the Labatt kidnapping," was his definite assertion. "These men," he added, "will be liable for the full penalties provided by law."

Some Canadians were included in the list of suspects who are alleged to have aided and abetted the kidnappers, he said. He would not definitely say how many were involved or how many of them were Canadian citizens.

The two men who are said to have been actively connected with the alleged plot to extort ransom from the Labatt brewery a few days before the kidnapping, the crown attorney explained. These two men, he said, had since been identified.

Accessories to the crime operated in London, he said, during the interregnum in laying the groundwork for the abduction.

broiling land, who were "not farmers at all", who left their implements out all winter and showed no signs of care or initiative. The government should not lend money to them.

Liberal leader Mackenzie King served notice yesterday he wants a full discussion of present conditions of unemployment and distress. He obtained from Prime Minister R. B. Bennett the assurance the Labor Department estimates dealing with unemployment relief and other matters would be opened up for detailed discussion at an early date when a general discussion of unemployment will be in order.

Today's Private Members' Day and a number of resolutions on the order paper will be discussed.

Legion Gets Grant

A grant of $9,000 for the Canadian Legion was passed. It is used to help returned men present their pension cases to the tribunals.

It was a fair subject of debate, whether the government should bear the cost of administering the Farm Loan Act and thus make money available to farmers at 4 per cent. Minister on Finance Rhodes told me House of Commons, when the resolution preliminary to the Bill amending the Act came before the House.

Some members had referred to the Bill as a "dole," but experience and a belated recognition of the difficulties of the farmer. This, said Mr. Rhodes was a most unfair criticism in view of the government's record. The Empire Agreements, the Farmers' Creditors Arrangement Act and the Natural Products Marketing Act had been three outstanding measures of great benefit to farmers.

The Provincial Farm Loan Board in Alberta had been most ruthless in its treatment of farmers, said E. J. Garland, M.P., Bow River. The "peculiar temperament" or those officials, he said: was the reason Alberta farmers had not taken advantage of the Act to as great a degree as they might have.

Interest Too High

Mr. Garland urged the Government bear the administration cost. Six percent interest was still too high. The Government should set an example to other lenders and lend money to farmers at four percent.

The Government proposed to administer the act in a generous spirit, said Mr. Rhodes. It did not wish to throw away public money and would insist on reasonable safeguards but it erred as it did, would err on the side of assisting farmers rather on that of husbanding money.

C. H. Howard, Liberal member for Sherbrooke, thought the legislation should go further and J. F. Poulin, Liberal member for Temiscouata said the farmers there had no money was because there was no market for their products which was because of the Government's tariff policy.

Mr. Bennett and Sir George Perley, minister without portfolio, Mr. Poulliot said, were two of the richest men in the country. He suggested they give some of their money to the farmers to compensate them for losses through the Government's tariff policy.

Reduction of interest rates was by E. O. Bertrand, Liberal member per Prescott, Mr. Bertrand also urged extending the term of farm loans, giving farmers more time in which to meet their debts.

"As one, who has never been enthusiastic about either provincial or Federal farm loan schemes I dread the consequences of this legislation," said Hon. W. R. Motherwell Liberal member for Melville.

Not Way Out

He feared a large part of the mortgaged land would go back to the Government. At its best the scheme should be regarded as a makeshift, an expedient to tide the country over a short time of difficulty.

"The way to get out of a hole is to dig deeper hours and more leisure," declared Mr. Motherwell who said he had seen the experience of 78 years. "It is by hard work and intelligent saving that a farmer can be agreed with a lot of what Mr. Motherwell said. The Act had been enacted by a Liberal Government because there was a dearth of reasonable mortgage facilities because there was an almost total lack of mortgage money for farmers, consequently the Act was being extended.

He, he said, said Mr. Rhodes, that private lenders with poor loans would seem to be glad by demanding the farmer to apply for loans. The government would not be a party to any such move. It would not assist any creditor to get the best out of a bad bargain.

Hon. J. C. Elliot, Liberal member for Middlesex West, again urged the minister to consider reducing the interest rate to four per cent and the resolution then passed. The bill was given first reading.

A GREAT BANDMASTER

The recent death of J. T. Shunk, of Lindsay, bandmaster, is felt keenly by Belleville associates of his who came in contact with his musician at various times in his striking career. Trained under an Imperial bandmaster, he was bandmaster of a number of musical organizations, was a noted cornet soloist, and travelled with theatrical organizations. At Hastings he organized the 40th Regiment Band. He was engaged to direct the city band of Batavia, N.Y., and returning to Canada led a number of bands in Western Ontario. He then played in Toronto. The 21st Alberta Hussars Band of Medicine Hat was his creation and from Medicine Hat he came to Ontario at the outbreak of the war. He enlisted with the 80th Battalion and when that unit left Belleville he was ill in hospital. Serving with the 155th Battalion here, he later went to New York where he took charge of music in connection with the New York Depot of the British and Canadian Recruiting Mission. It having been discovered that he was a speaker of convincing arguments, he was added to the staff speaking in which capacity he delivered addresses almost daily in addition to his musical work. This mission brought in 8,500 recruits and no small measure of the access was due to him for he had some of the finest professional musicians of that city under his baton.

Returning to Canada he re-organized the Renfrew Citizens' Band, and later Pembroke offered him the supervision of music in the Collegiate, both vocal and instrumental of the latter of which, as he held the Renfrew post. Five years ago he went to Lindsay and organized the Boys' Band which, in the last year, the band won second place at the C.N.E., Toronto, in 1933.

John Theodore Shunk was a composer of band music of note, and was expert at arranging and transposing. He composed a Vesper hymn recently sung in a Toronto church. For a time he was leader of St. Paul's Anglican choir at Lindsay.

His band of boys received the commendation of His Excellency Lord Willingdon when Governor-General of Canada. He was a good disciplinarian. His fine sense of discipline and the spirit he was able to instil into his musicians wherever he went is spelled out in the high fine quality of making friendships which could never be broken because they were real and vital.

Bandmasters rarely receive the praise they should. Every city is deeply indebted to its band and especially to its leader for its musical attainments and would be surprised to receive adequate commendation and yet that is just what is necessary to make the municipal organization a unit, such as the Lindsay Boys' Band has proved itself to be under "Dad" Shunk. Bandsmen lead lives of sacrifice dispensing sweet music and should at least be suitably honored. Every honor shown a bandmaster and his musicians means that much improvement in the band and its music.

There are many fine musicians but there are not nearly so many fine bandsmen who are also soloists and leaders. Leadership calls for unusual qualities. And fortunate is that city or town which possesses a leader of this type. And yet even the average bandmaster is much undervalued.

While those municipalities are rich which possess music lovers in plenty, the municipal band is something apart, for voices the people as a community and therefore is always worthy of adequate support. But the way in which most towns and cities act seems to indicate that the people believe you can have greater music by allowing your bandsmen to suffer lack of appreciation both in the form of money and praise, that you can get more exquisite music out of a suffering group of bandsmen. No band grows rich, no bandsman grows rich or even well-to-do, his love of his art is so great that money making has not a chance to develop in his heart, for music is a jealous mistress and crowds out all but herself in the love and devotion of the musician.

Lindsay has been blest in being that type of town which appreciates its band leader. The result was evident—a prize-winning band. And among those young bandsmen the spirit of "Dad" Shunk will go "marching on" forever.

TOO MUCH OF A THING

Adolf Hitler, German Chancellor, is shrewd enough to know that constant saluting will make of the Nazi 'Heil Hitler' an empty form. So he has banned the upraised hand during the carnival season and has substituted "a more or less stately bow, placing the right hand over the heart."

These forms of courtesy and salute are so easy of exaggeration and are abused by too much use. According to stories from Germany the "Heil" has gone to the most ridiculous extremes, so that even if Hitler himself were a demigod, he would want men to desist from constant iteration of the salute. Especially would the salute become associated with frivolity in carnival scenes and the foes of generations of the "Heil" if any were so Hitler might offend most in their exaggerated as to dare.

WINTER TRAVEL GROWS

The present winter has found man mostly in control of the season. Snow has not blocked the roads, thanks not so much to the modern conveyances as to the manner in which nature delivered the snow.

Winter travel is something that will grow more and more, there can not be the slightest doubt of that. Highways are kept free of snow and the sideroads are more and more being cleared. Last winter for a few brief periods some of the roads were blocked but modern machinery dug out the tied-up neighborhoods. It is always possible for the weather to surprise the road men, but it can never be long before the road clearing equipment is at work.

Winter travel is a trend of the times as summer travel is. Travel on highways in the summer months is many times what it used to be and with winter travel spirit fully developed the roads must bear more and more of traffic in the snowy and colder months.

IT WASN'T COMMON SENSE THAT STOPPED THE GAMBLING ORGY IN 1929

Doubtless you know about the Townsend plan to pension the aged and put an end to poverty and crime.

It is beautifully simple. Each person over sixty years of age is to be given $200 a month and pledged to quit work and spend the money within 30 days. Younger men and women will take their jobs, and such a vast outpouring and turnover of money will keep all the factories busy supplying goods and provide work for everybody in the United States.

All that remains is to raise the money. It seems to be agreed that we have about nine million people over 60. Their pensions, plus the cost of distribution, will require about two billion dollars a month or $24,000,000,000 a year.

That kind of money doesn't grow on trees. Somebody must labor for it.

Since there isn't that much money in the country and it is therefore manifestly impossible to raise the whole sum at one time, the plan is to levy a tax on sales.

The nation's annual business is now estimated at thirty billion dollars. To raise $24,000,000,000 would be to require a sales tax of $24 on each $30 purchase—80 cents on the dollar. A $1000 car would cost $1800, a $1 pair of hose $1.80.

The cost of living will be almost doubled for those who are not pensioned. Those who have fixed incomes will be able to buy only a little more than half as much.

These figures aren't exact, but they give the general idea. There are no exact figures.

The plan is gaining popularity every day. Scores of Congressmen who respect voters more than arithmetic have agreed to vote for it. When it is finally decided, over the President's veto, and somehow operate for a few months before the smash?

There are millions of fine old people who could spend $200 a month; there are also millions who are invalids or senile or simple. What a harvest for the shysters and swindlers. Already they sniff the bait from afar. And they would fall over one another to get the helpless old folks signed up to buy junk on the installment plan.

Relatives would do the swindling in many cases. And think what a grand time the children could have if all four grandparents were alive and pledged to spend $800 a month.

Don't think it a joke. Politicians are afraid to say anything against it. They have heard of a monster petition bearing 25,000,000 names.

Of course you could offer a petition to pay $5000 cash to every citizen whose annual income is less than $500 and get fifty million signers, but what of it? Politicians are easy to scare. And history shows that the wildest schemes are hardest to stop when they get going.—Fountain Inn (S.C.) Tribune.

WHY PANHANDLING PAYS

The fact that panhandling pays well explains why the practice is persistent. And it pays specially well now, because it is generally known that there is involuntary unemployment and people are in the mood to do what they can to relieve the destitution as it comes to their notice without stopping to inquire whether the supposed victims are really unfortunate sufferers or plain dead beats who never work when they can avoid it.—Columbia Dispatch.

TOURISTS WILL BE FEW

Germany is dropping its railway fares by 60 per cent for the benefit of tourists. In view of what the average individual thinks of Germany under the present regime, tourists will probably require much greater inducement before they can be persuaded to cross its borders.—Brockville Recorder and Times.

Wealth is not his that has it but his that enjoys it.—Benjamin Franklin.

AUTUMN OF LIFE

Into your arms, O, autumn night,
I beg you, gather me,
Teach me the need of each bird's flight
And every leafless tree;
Show why the rose must suffer blight,
Why winter has to be!

O, night, I ask you to reveal
Your secrets to my mind;
There must be truths this hurt to heal,
Could they but be divined,
And now I strangely seem to feel
That winter may be kind.

Show my rebellious, eager heart,
So tuned to song and flowers,
How cold and silence play their part,
How stillness has its powers;
Let me forget this ache, this smart
And welcome winter hours!

—Aline Michaelis.

NIGHT TIME IS SLEEP TIME and when noisy truck drivers tearing down Front Street in the wee sma' hours disturb the sleep of hotel patrons it is time to call a halt. Disturbing the peace, injuring a local industry by keeping its patrons awake when they should be asleep—if there isn't a law against that sort of thing there should be one made right away—but as the noises complained of are totally unnecessary it would seem that they constitute a breach of the peace and call for police action.

BETTER STREET LIGHTING for Belleville will very likely be the outcome of a conference between members of the Retail Merchants Association and the local Hydro Commission and Manager. These two bodies are in accord and it only remains for the members of the City Council to reach the same happy accord to ensure a program of street lighting which will make Belleville one of the brightest cities in Canada. As a result of the same conference the merchants are taking steps to use considerably more current for their window illumination, which will add materially to the general brightness of the business section.

DIONNES OF CORBEIL are on their way to Chicago, Pullman cars, drawing rooms, 'n everything, in what press despatches refer to as their first holiday. Dionnes, of course, are the parents of the famous quintuplets, who brought fame to Dr. Dafoe, Hastings Old Boy, as well. Dr. Dafoe was dined and wined and made much of in New York City and Washington; now the parents are off for a glimpse of the Great White Way of Chicago, The Loop, and various other places, as guests of persons unknown. All expenses are being paid by someone and the trip is on a grand scale at that, and it is said that there is to be no publicity stunts—so what's it all about? That no doubt, will develop later.

SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERIES of the past twenty-five years have upset theories held in the past fifty years, and scientific experts tell us that the next twenty-five years will probably upset and outstrip everything developed during the past hundred years. Perhaps the very latest scientific triumph, if such it may be called, is the transmitting of a large block of electric power by wireless. This experiment was successfully performed by the General Electric scientists at Schenectady, N.Y. The thought that occurs to the Man on the Street is the possibility of a block of power, being transmitted by wireless, coming in close contact with the earth, in transit, and seriously interfering with the physical comfort of the individuals getting in its way. Perhaps we are getting to be a bit too smart and may inadvertently build up a Frankenstein which will be destructive rather than instructive,—but "the show must go on."

GET TO KNOW YOURSELF AND YOUR ABILITY

Self Understanding Ranks Among Finest of Assets

By Louis E. Bisch M.D., Ph.D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright' 1934, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Let us assume that you know a lot about your job. Let us assume also that you have stored your mind with valuable data and that you are keen and alert and intelligent.

Perhaps you are even especially gifted in sizing up men and women, in determining their motives in being able to influence them.

We will even assume that your love life is adjusted perfectly and that your home and family life could not possibly be improved upon.

What, however—besides all this—do you know about yourself?

Are you thoroughly acquainted with yourself? Do you understand and know yourself as well as you do your strongest competitor.

Several centuries ago there were inscribed on the temple of Aesculapius at Delphi two simple words: "Know Thyself." This was the wisdom of one of the wisest men —Socrates. For he knew, as, even at this time, all thinking men know, that the person who knows himself thoroughly ranked among the greatest and most valuable of assets.

It is a strange, yet, nevertheless, undeniable fact, that men and women may be versed in many things and fully qualified in the line of knowledge so essential to happiness and peace of mind.

What does it matter if one earns hundreds of dollars a day if one does not have an insight into the mental and emotional mechanisms which, in the last analysis, are far more important than worldly wealth? Material success may mean very often does not, prove worthwhile in the end, unless the mind is functioning as it should.

This is because every man is struggling to find himself, is groping and reaching out, is trying to express and, above himself, is attempting to harmonize with the world which surrounds him.

Let us try to explore our inner selves to discover what may be there. Unless we know what is there we cannot expect to know how to use it, so that we may utilize the very best of our inherent qualities.

Everyone instinctively feels an urge, a desire, a craving for self-knowledge. But too often we allow that force to remain dormant until our health breaks down or we live a life in a fog, we smash against the rocks.

Know this hidden force—your motives, your desires, your weaknesses, your weaknesses and prejudices—if you would harness it, direct it and make it more effective.

Psychology will help you. Reflection will help you. Let us look into the thoughts of wise men are beneficial.

But explore yourself, study yourself, become thoroughly familiar with yourself.

That is the way to lead your life in the most satisfying manner. That is the way to develop along correct lines, which eventually will reach the goal of real happiness.

Always know yourself thoroughly!

Vitamin A is present in many fats. Fats also are excellent lubricators of the intestinal canal and since they burn easily, they are a source of heat and energy within the body.

One-third of a child's daily calories should be fat calories. Adults may do with less, although marked individual differences exist in adults as to their fat requirements and the ease with which they digest fat.

FOR SICK STOMACH AND NAUSEA

When the stomach seems "upset" or gives you a nauseated feeling . . . you may be certain that, in most cases, over-acidity is the cause of the trouble. Neutralize it at once with Bisurated Magnesia. This brings relief, because with the excess acid neutralized, the stomach can be restored to its normal balance. Digestive processes then function "sweetly".

Because Bisurated Magnesia is Bismuth in Magnesia, it is also effective in relieving intestinal acid stomach and kindred ailments . . . thus either bismuth or magnesia used alone.

PICNIC OUTDOORS IN ZERO WEATHER

Stirling Group Enjoys Novel Winter's Entertainment

Stirling, Feb. 5—A few days ago, Mr. and Mrs. Loveland, Mr. and Mrs. Casement, Miss Dorothy Johnston, Miss Dorothea Thompson, and Mr. Fred Slaks, packed their lunches and journeyed out to the woods for a picnic that they had planned for more than a week.

Motoring over a heavy snow covered road that had to be broken earlier in the day, they arrived at the appointed spot. It was a calm, cold, (shady) glen, where they were quite sure of being undisturbed by other pleasure seekers. Here, they erected seats and benches, and some sort of wind-break, sitting before a huge fire they soon became warm enough to shed their coats.

"But were you not cold?" Miss Johnston was asked, "No," she replied, and related how one young lady singed her eye brows.

One thing was lacking, however, to provide a true picnic atmosphere. There were no ants to be found in the entire lunch. No doubt the inconvenience of eating dainty sandwiches with mittens on made up for the loss. The lunch included hot dogs roasted over the fire and they drank hot coffee instead of the usual ice cold lemonade.

On returning home it is reported that one couple found the fire out and the wood box empty; but all in all they had a picnic. All stated quite emphatically that they thoroughly enjoyed the unique festival outing.

On Saturday, Feb. 2, two Sunday school classes; one of St. Paul's United Church, and one of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, engaged the rink for a hockey game. These boys ranging in ages from 13 to 15 years, deserve credit for their ability to organize sports without help from older heads.

The contest was won by the boys from Art; Duncan's class of St. Andrew's. Good clean sportsmanship on the part of both teams was generously displayed.

Mr. George Montgomery of Frankford states that on Saturday evening, while motoring to Stirling, a woodchuck crossed the road in front of his car. Is this a sign of spring?

Hands Across Mission Band of St. Paul's United Church held a Valentine tea and sale of home cooking and candy in the church parlors on Saturday, Feb. 2. The booth which was in charge of Miss Iva Lummis and Miss Helen Jeffrey was tastefully decorated in red and white. The tea tables were presided over by Mesdames Judd and Beacock, the Valentine color being much in evidence. The older girls of the mission band assisted in the serving.

Disloyal Shouts Attorney At Mrs. Rudy Vallee

New York, Feb. 5.—(AP)— Fay Webb Vallee, an attorney's bride estranged husband, Rudy Vallee, shouted today in Supreme Court, was the mate of a "disloyal woman" married to a man.

Outlining the defence case in Mrs. Vallee's action to invalidate a separation agreement, attorney Goldstein said $100 a week, H. Bushel said:

"We will show that Mrs. Vallee was the most disloyal woman ever married to a man, that she did not deserve a nickel. That she got $100 a week too much."

The alleged romance between Miss Vallee and Hugh Sinclair, Adagio dancer, was injected into the case by Bushel.

"We will show that she carried on with Leon Garfield Leon, otherwise known as Gary Leon," Bushel said.

RULES TO PREVENT FOOD POISONING

Laboratory Chief For Quebec Outlines Methods

In a special article on poisonous foodstuffs written for the Bell Telephone Quarterly, Chief of Laboratories of Province of Quebec in a recent issue of Health Bulletin, he states that the last dead line of defence against food poisoning is the watchfulness and common sense of the housewife.

He explains that bacteria, in these days of extensive selling of prepared or partially prepared foods, so many of the steps involved in the preparation of food she serves at table are beyond her control, the housewife should exercise constant diligence and, above all, take no chances. She must bear in mind that the probability of a food that may cause poisoning may or may not be indicated by the appearance, odor, or taste. Mr. McCready recommends thorough cooking as it constitutes the chief safeguard against poisoned foods, since it destroys not only the bacteria which cause poisoning but also the toxins.

PRACTICAL RULES

With these facts as a basis, Mr. McCready has prepared a series of practical rules to be observed by housewives, or any other persons whose duty it is to prepare food.

They are as follows:

Whenever a food shows the least indication of spoilage, throw it away; a sign of spoilage is a sign of danger.

Whenever a metal container of food proves upon opening, a normal appearance and notice the odor; if the appearance, of the food or its odor is not normal, throw the food away.

Keep all meats, milk and food mixtures cold until cooked or served. Cook cold will retard growth of bacteria.

Cooked food left-overs, especially meat, should be kept cold until again served.

Be particularly careful to prevent contamination by flies, rats and mice. The pantry should be light and well-ventilated.

Whenever possible, heat the food in every process of cooking so that it will be exposed to boiling temperature for at least a half-hour before serving. In some cases it is dangerous food may show no sign of spoilage, but sufficient heat will usually destroy both the bacteria and their toxins.

When cooking, cook thoroughly. It is surprising how slowly heat will penetrate to the interior of a mass of food. If the cooking is not complete, some bacteria or their toxins may escape the heating and cause food poisoning.

When canning or preserving food in the home use properly the pressure cooker process. The boiling water process may be used for acid foods, such as some fruits, but since ordinary boiling temperatures will not kill Botulinus spores within a reasonable time, the non-acid foods must be kept cold until again served, or else cooked under pressure.

Never try to economize by consuming a food of which you have the slightest doubt. Throw away anything may be sudden and fatal.

If food poisoning is ever suspected, call the doctor immediately and save, so far as possible, a portion of every food served during the previous 48 hours, so that the doctor can send these samples to the laboratory for examination. Such examinations may reveal the cause of the poisoning and aid the doctor in his diagnosis and treatment.

Seiberling HOT WATER BOTTLES

Crude Rubber to Finished Product — Rubber comes originally in the form of a milky liquid that flows from cuts in the rubber tree. This liquid is coagulated and rolled into sheets. The sheeted rubber is smoked and dried and shipped to the manufacturing plants.

There it is mixed with vulcanizing agents and stiffened leaving it ready for curing. It is cut into pieces and placed in moulds under very high hydraulic pressure and vulcanized with steam in temperatures ranging up to 350 degrees F. Under this treatment the rubber flows evenly over the moulds and takes the form of the Water Bottle. In one piece of moulded rubber, with no seams, the bottle is trimmed and the patented leak-proof neck is fitted to it. The closure is grooved and tongues are moulded into the bottle. The tongues and grooves are vulcanized together thereby eliminating any trouble due to leaks at the neck of the bottle.

From the crude rubber state the bottle has gone through at least twenty operations and numerous inspections to ensure the hyper of receiving the highest grade possible, a product guaranteed against time and imperfections in the making.

Mrs. E. Dionne Different From What Expected

(By Ruth Cowan)

Chicago, Feb. 6.—(AP)—She is very different from what one might expect, this mother of quintuplets and five other children, 10 young sisters in all—and only 26 years old.

A simple country lass, Mrs. Oliva Dionne has come out of her Canadian north woods in a plain home-made brown crepe dress to be housed in a regal suite in the Congress Hotel, entertain several Presidents of the United States and stayed flushed here and there, a famous personage with theatrical producers ringing her telephone.

Child-like is this woman, this world's most widely known mother of today, who has little to say and that in French only.

But very maternal is this mother who although her intelligence makes her acquiescent to science, rebels now and then, it was learned through associates, at the ultra-sterilized 1933 way of raising babies as practiced in the skilful care of the specialists by Dr. Allen Dafoe and two nurses.

But she takes the routine cheerfully. It was suggested from the Joseph Rochon of North Bay, Ont., a cousin of her husband's and a member of the Dionne travelling party.

It was with Spartan courage that the shy, diffident Callander, Ont., mother, whose deepest railroad trip was her honeymoon journey to Montreal in 1925, faced the repeated photographers' flash lights, the onslaught of reportorial questions, the awe-inspiring equipment of movie reels.

Constant Bustle

With quiet dignity she has adjusted herself to the almost constant hectic bustle about her. Her wide brown eyes at times mirror utter bewilderment amid chattering inquisitive strangers babbling at her in a tongue strange to her. Now and then she flashes an odd half-smile at her slim equally quiet husband. At times she gives the impression that to her it is all a dream—just a dream, that she today was to shop in some of the country's biggest department stores, the like of which she has never seen, for toys, for clothes, beautiful new clothes, including a dinner dress.

And what woman, even if she is the mother of ten children, wouldn't get a thrill out of a new party dress. But Mrs. Lioune, whose brown travelling frock came down to the insteps of her plain oxford ties, was worrying for fear a dinner dress might be just a little too low.

But the programme of the Dionne's few weeks in the United States—their first trip to this country—is a visit to a Night Club, and then, of course, appearances on theatrical stages in Chicago and Detroit and probably another Night Club, and then, of course, appearances on the theatrical stages in Chicago and Detroit and probably other cities.

'Lock Stable Door After Horse Gone'

Sarnia, Ont., Feb. 5.—(CP)—One of the city's trucks was practically ruined when struck by a train at a level crossing so council will purchase a new one and has ordered all city-owned vehicles to stop at railway level crossings hereafter.

New York, Feb. 6 (CP)—A two-storey frame cottage, unoccupied but completely furnished, went sailing down Jamaica Bay today but was unable to clear South Channel bridge and sank.

The cottage, which floated half a mile before it struck the bridge, was lifted off its foundations by ice and high tide. Its owner, William Mullins of Brooklyn, was notified that pending salvage operations his summer address is at the bottom of South Channel.

Katharine Hepburn's Wardrobe as "Lady Babbie"

One of her most beautiful costumes shown above at the left, is of light blue taffeta, featuring hand-made frays, fastening the double-breasted bodice, and self-covered buttons and loops of cording which continue this motif in the skirt. The sleeve pleats are mounted with rows of the cording, frogs hooking the cuffs. White mousseline edged with real tatting forms the beautiful plastron and collar. A carved coral pin and earrings in shell pink are ideal accessories.

At the right Miss Hepburn wears a graceful creation. Of soft, gleaming white, the dress itself is shining while satin, worn over a full ruffled crinoline and ruffled satin slip. The delicate, white overdress is dotted net, edged with wide bands of fine shirred lace. Bands of the same lace trim the neck and the full sleeves gathered closely at the wrists.

A distinguished costume is this heavy silk rust brocaded gown (inset). It is designed with the distinctive empire waistline, and has a loose back allowing a glimpse of contrasting satin lining. Gold thread embroidery enhances the hems, and puffed sleeves top off the costume.

In the outdoor sequences of "The Little Minister", costumes worn by Miss Hepburn include the flower gypsy dress and, as another striking romantic contrast, a dress with light-fitting double breasted waist-length jacket reflecting a military influence with gold buttons.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By Beatrice Fairfax

BY BEATRICE FAIRFAX
HAS LOVE ANY CLOSE RELATION TO MANNERS?

Have manners anything to do with love? Or with life itself?

Or have they completely gone into the discard?

A young correspondent who feels very strongly about this question has put the matter up to me, and, as you will see, she has put it very forcibly.

"A big conflict is on", Miriam writes, "between my parents and myself. I am wildly in love with a boy and he with me, but for money reasons I can't marry him without the consent of my father and mother. This they won't give, and their chief reason, if you will believe me is that 'he has no manners'.

"What they don't understand is that he doesn't believe in all that hypocritical stuff, and neither do I. If Joe feels like sitting with his feet on a table, that's just what he feels like doing. If he is introduced to anybody he hates the sight of, he just sits tight and lets the bowing and scraping go. He's the kind of man I honor as well as love, and I mean to marry him. What in the world have manners to do with love?

We'll have to admit that the manners that were taught in the homes of twenty-five years ago have been a good deal better boiled down. People, especially young people, are much less polite than they used to be, more than that's a change for the better — the worse.

I believe, however, that the essentials remain and will continue to, and that in spite of Miriam they really have a great deal to do with love. That is, with the intelligence of love. Miriam might be proud of Joe's lack of consideration for Mr. X and Z, but if she married him and he were inconsiderate of her friends, she'd be associating with manners toward his wife, what then?

Wouldn't that be a different story? Wouldn't the very life of Joe's love depend on whether Joe acted like a selfish brute or like a tender and thoughtful husband?

We wear freer and more sloppy clothes than we used to, grid it's only natural that our manners should have become freer and more sloppy likewise. But we have not yet come to the point, and are not likely to, of dating without a minimum of clothes, or, similarly, of manners.

No girl gives a girl, or boy either, as it if they did, that pretty clothes have something to do with love. Other-wise, why such a scramble for a new hat and a dashing frock when it's a question of fascinating the new boy-friend?

But can it be that the boy, who is supposedly beguiled by a scrap of bright felt attached to a wave of black hair, doesn't take notice on the girl underneath?

Of course he does, frank, charming ways—the equivalent of what used to be called manners—are a part of him. Have they nothing to do with the conviction that he may be the man for her? Isn't that also in the swellest girl in the world and that he adores her?

I cannot believe it.

THANK-YOU LETTERS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. My boy friend's aunt, who lives out of town, rent him a Christmas box, and in it there was a box of lovely linen handkerchiefs for me. Also there was candy, nuts and some jams and jellies to which I shared. I would like you to help me compose a letter of thanks to her. I have never met her, but I am very hard to write and thank her for everything, and yet not have too many "thank-yous" in the letter.

2. Shall I end my letter with "Yours truly" or "Sincerely yours"? I would also like to say something complimentary about her to her nephew has told me, but I would not want it to be too flattering.

W.

1. You might begin your letter with the pleasant thing that the young man said about his aunt — "She is a dear." Then add a few pleasant comments with people about when they are said about. Then thank her for her kindnesses to you. Something like this, perhaps, for the beginning of your letter:

Dear Mrs. Allen:

No wonder is it that Tommy says you are one of the kindest and friendliest ladies he knows. I think you are thoughtful not only of people whom you know, but also of people whom you don't. And I thank you with all my heart, for your goodness to me. I appreciate it very deeply touched when Tommy told me of the box you had included for me in his Christmas box, and when he gave me the beautiful handkerchiefs I was delighted at your generous thought of me. Thank you very much, my lady. The handkerchiefs are quite the loveliest I have ever seen, so sheer and so dainty.

And Tommy also let me share the goodies that you sent him, the candy and the delicious jams and jellies. So you see you made my Christmas very happy indeed. I am a very grateful girl that you were willing to take me on trial as you did, and to be so sweet in your plans for me.

I do hope that I am very soon to have the great pleasure of meeting you and Tommy's other friends in Aunt Mary", as Tommy always calls you. In the meantime, to you, my full of appreciation of you, always

The friendliest of greetings to you, Mrs. Allen, and the deepest of thanks.

Very sincerely yours,

2. Don't ever use "Yours truly" or "Very truly yours." Use "Yours very truly", as the closing of any friendly or business letter. For this letter use "Very sincerely yours", or "Most sincerely yours".

THE GIRL PAYS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. If a girl invites a young man to a dance where there is a charge for the tickets, is the young man supposed to offer her the ticket, even to offer to pay for the tickets?

2. Suppose also that the young man is a guest, and that there is a charge for the tickets Should he ask first or later.

C.

1. It is the girl, who has mentioned the dance, who provides and pays for the tickets to the dance. She is the hostess, and the young man. The young man should take this fact for granted and should not pay for the tickets, or offer to pay for them. There are an infinite number of occasions for the young man to return this hospitality. But this is not one. Invitation is her party, and so she should provide it. Merely back linen with a degree of her hospitality.

2. He shouldn't ask about the tickets.

Mystery Apt To Arouse Fear In A Child

By LISA GRENELLE

"What have you done with my mother?" demanded Georgie clutching his daddy bear in one arm, his fist clenched.

But Aunt Mary and Aunt Sally and Uncle Herbert didn't pay any attention, but went on whispering among themselves. So Georgie advancing further into the room shouted in Aunt Mary's ear, "I want to see my mother—what have you done with her?"

"Hush " Aunt Mary said sharply, "you'll wake her up."

"She isn't asleep, it's not night."

"Your mother's sick, Georgie."

"I'll get her a cake like I got for a walk," Aunt Sally said.

"I don't want to go or a walk— I want to see—"

"If you don't behave yourself, Georgie, we cannot keep you here."

Georgie made a rude face and gave a vicious kick to the nearest chair. There he would remain until he got a drink of water. All these old folks who were keeping his mother shut up.

Kept From His Mother

Georgie was forbidden to see his mother. She needed quiet, the doctor said, absolute quiet. Georgie said that he wouldn't make a noise, that they didn't pay any attention to him. They didn't believe him. His mother would have. She would have allowed him in. She always did, to, and that in spite of Miriam they have had no chance to get acquainted with each other.

Georgie had been about away from his mother for a week. It was like his mother to sneak off this way without a word to him. She never did things like that. Maybe she was dead. Maybe these strange people had killed her. Georgie didn't trust them, especially the nurse and the doctor. But his aunts and uncles, they had been here, they were well. This was his first visit, and they weren't like his mother.

They continued to have a lot of trouble with Georgie. He was always sneaking up to the sick room, and once when he was diverted from his purpose by a cake, he let out a perfect tantrum, kicking at the door and pounding it with his fists, calling—"Mother "

Explain Things to Him

He got in finally after all, and found his mother lying in the dark, but alive, and not looking an different. She took his hand and smiled at him reassuringly. After that, though regarding the other members of the household with suspicion, he was easier to manage.

It's funny how few adults seem to feel that a child is entitled to due an explanation for any unusual happening. Children, under stress are often supposed to have any heart, not supposed to be capable of apprehension. Georgie, with his instinctive sense of safety, directly physical, resentment, distrust or any kind of mental suffering whatever. Perhaps because they don't show their anxiety in mature fashion.

Georgie was always going through a terrible experience, and most of his suffering was unnecessary. At least if it was wiser for him not to see his mother he might have been allowed to speak to her through the door, or been given a daily resume, ing message from her.

CHILDREN'S CONSTIPATION Ended!

More than a touch of gold marks some of the smart afternoon frocks designed for Summer wear. A charming frock is in a fine-striped cobalt blue silk with a double breast of jacket and a cascade jabot with gold clasp. The jacket has gilt buttons and a gold bow.

Hide and seek with the sun is popular when one can play the game with a cape-like wrap. A new model, designed for resort wear, has a wide, flat-ring brim and is in a novelty black linen with a design of white seagulls and sails. The hat is faced with white piqué.

Just the thing for wear now is an afternoon frock of black heavy cloky silk crepe with a scarf neck of Persian silk; a band of the silk, about four inches deep, is on the loose sleeves at the wrists. The dress is straight and simple and is belted with black suede.

Go out to tea and wear a smart suit. A new model is in cedar bark moire, the dress with short, puffed sleeves, the jacket made of horizontal pleats that extend into a full upstanding frill collar.

On the move from one place to another means that a smart travelling coat is necessary. Colorful, comfy and smart is a loose coat of fine navy blue tweed with huge wheels of red fox at the shoulder.

A smart girl recently arrived down South wearing a belted jacket suit in grege corduroy with a very wide rib. The hat was made of matching fabric. With this was worn a sable scarf and a tailored shirt blouse of brown satin.

Buried Ancient Palestine Revealed by Archeologists

Principal Kent of Queen's Theological College, Throws Light on Early Life in Palestine

Origins of the Holy Land, dating back into ages which can be approximately fixed as revealed by the spade of the excavator, by the photographic machinery now in use on the mound of Megiddo (Armageddon), sliding layer after layer of that hill under the direction of the American Schools of Oriental Research, with the large gift of John D. Rockefeller, were brought home to the people of Belleville last evening in the third lecture of the Belleville Citizenship series under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce. Rev. Dr. Kent, principal of Queen's Theological College, Kingston, spoke and illustrated the work of exploration and the finds by pictures taken on the scene.

This was the ancient Palestine which is now rapidly changing, said Dr. Kent, since the land came under the protectorate of Great Britain at the close of the Great War, bringing the new order of things north to south as Brockville is from Belleville and never wider than it is from Kingston. It was Palestine, the speaker made clear. In Bible days not more than three hundred or a million persons ever lived in that land and the words "flowing with milk and honey" were quite comparative in respect to the desert-like land of rocks, hills and valleys where nature was rather niggardly save the Jew a great deal of the rugged character as well as the Scotch highlands have produced the Highlander and Switzerland the Swiss. Ancient conquerors found how hard it was to conquer Palestine who were protected by deflin passes and hills, and deserts and wilderness. It took many years for rains to reduce the Jews of Judaea and to cause the armies had to go through in single file.

Modern Palestine

But modern Palestine, Dr. Kent explained before going into the subject of the archeological, Bibleland is being made over now. Jerusalem is a modern city, with telephones, electric lights, radio, a water system which pumps 2,000,000 gallons of water hourly whereas the old Jerusalem had to depend on water for centuries brought from the hills of Judea by tunnel through the solid rock. Today the King David Hotel valued at a quarter of a million pounds contains two hundred beds for visitors to the city. The Mediterranean is the landing place for the weekly plane service from London to Jerusalem. On the steep and rapidly-flowing Jordan is a vast Hydro electric development, and finally at the port of Haifa on the Mediterranean, having been brought across Palestine from Iraq by pipes over the country rich in religious and Biblical history, they will soon be using Mesopotamian world, and used for the Royal Naval.

"Palestine is one of the few countries of the world which has felt little of the depression, owing to the British protectorate.

"Palestine today is prosperous is furnished by two sources, the Bible and the spade of the excavator," Principal Kent said, "a notoriously vague," said the professor, "They give only little bits here and there as occasion arises of their history.

Old Palestine Buried

"The old Palestine is largely buried feet wide and a few feet deep mounds—ists the Arabs call them—it may be there is an Arab village on it. This understanding of the remains of ancient cities . Mesopotamia may have the same, and it is difficult to find just where you are.

"A vast amount of information has been dug out of the earth as to the history of civilization in Mesopotamia, but most of all in Babylonia and Mesopotamia.

"How is it that all these cities are buried in mounds?" asked Dr. Kent, and he answered: "The rock is largely limestone, houses were built of limestone, with the result when the clay the stone decays, the houses fall down in a century or less, are covered over, and buried and new ones are built on top. Sometimes there are five cities, from the Fifth to the sixteenth century B.C., pulled down or burned the walls of cities and cities lay in ruins for possibly a century and were then built over. In the Middle East the climate seldom rain from above but from below by soil rises inch by inch and foot by foot. Besides in the old days houses used to be thrown into the streets or under the house. streets have risen, houses have been pulled down and age after age, century after century the cities have risen.

"It has been the business of the archeologist to see what is at the beneath of value to students of the Old Testament. Some things have corroborating some things of the Old Testament and some discoveries make it more difficult for men to understand the O. T.

Obstacles To Discoveries

"Results has been rather disappointing to Palestine," Dr. Kent pointed out. Work of exploration is the most laborious activity by the places where Palestine is not inhabited. They cannot dig up Jerusalem because people live there in the houses, although they know that underneath is the old City of David and before that is the Canaanitish city.

"Now in Samaria it is different for it is deserted. Here excavators have found the King Ahab's palace and a wine cellar. Ahab had a large number of bad things said about him in the Old Testament but no-thing is said about his wine cellar. Research has shown he was no prohibitionist.

"At Megiddo (Rev. the old battleground of the nations where the Egyptians fought in 1479, where Ahab was killed, where the Crusaders battled, where Napoleon beat the Turks and Allenby General Allenby rounded up the Turkish forces excavation is going on now. Under the gift of John D. Rockefeller the mound of Megiddo has been bought from the authorities and the American Palestine Research Society is scientifically digging into the mound. Yet the discoveries are disappointing. They have given us information about the Bible but not about the early Hebrews. But now that the Bible has been found there are more say to obtain, there is hope of getting information.

Obstacles to discovery have been labor trouble, as the Arabs are naturally lazy and do not work without supervision and the cheapness of labor. Digging up old cities is the form of broken pottery, shipping it west and turning it back into gold, and the finding of the Ark of Noah's Covenant by the Arabs.

Principal Kent point on, Dr. Kent commented on the slides thrown on the screen by the Rev. W. Harold Reid and Rev. Dr. Cassandra, the latter's term. Mr. Reid himself being a graduate of Queen's who has done a much study in British Museum archeological finds from Palestine.

Some Illustrations

A photograph of the mummy of Rameses II. was shown by Dr. Kent in person and a portrait of a bust of his son Merneptah, the Pharaoh of the exodus were shown with the find in 1903 in Persepolis of the tablet of the King Hammurabi, the lawgiver, at the latter indicating a very complete code of Babylon 2000 B.C., as laws relating to doctors and their practice, veterinarians and their charges, usury rates, etc. A picture showed the physical contour of Palestine before the great convulsion had followed the great flood when the Jordan rift and the Mediterranean Sea. The Dead Sea, 1400 feet deep is 1400 feet below sea level, whereas the Galilee sea is seven only twelve miles from the Mediterranean, the highest point of the Mediterranean. The trip from Jerusalem is "down" while that to Jericho is "up" as the Bible says. Jerusalem has been destroyed by fire and the nature of the surrounding country with desert on the south, wilderness and hills to the east, and the Jordan valley to the north, has been a back many invaders, though Allenby, Gen. Sir E. H. H. Allenby, Viscount Allenby, made his position impregnable to protect the army against lack of water. On the west of the city of Jerusalem are mountains, and on Palestine have come from the north and the east, and Allenby was able to protect their rear by conquering all along the line of communication. Jerusalem is a city of the Great Ward that is the developments towards the north, Prof. Kent said.

Interest was centred on the Tomb of the Kings, discovered by Palestine was only ninety feet long but thirty-five wide and fifty feet deep. It was developed by the Babylonians, a new temple was built, and when King Herod came to the great Roman builders, offered to rebuild the temple, but the Jews refused. At the northwest of the enlarged city Hadrian erected a temple to Antonia in honor of Mark Antony, the friend of Julius Caesar and it is said that on the site of Antonia there was a danger of riot in the time of Christ. Here the Roman and Jews and Gentiles that a garrison was maintained. From this tower Paul addressed the people when he was witnessed and whence soldiers went to his rescue.

Method of Work

Excavation is carried on by native workers, the soil is carried off in baskets on the heads of the workers, and the soil is sifted for any traces of coin, metal, weapons, implements, pottery, or bits of bone. From the pottery it is fairly easy to reach a decision as to date of the finds, which is important from the science of ceramics grown.

Dr. Kent spoke of the finding of a boundary stone at Gezer and commented on slides showing early Egyptian and Babylonian tablets dating back three thousand years before Christ and the discovery of the Ark-tore Abraham and belonging to the Ur-Nammu dynasties.

In these signs of the temple area were found, the pillars indicating sacrifice. The Jews were forbidden protesting against those in the Bible records.

One very interesting find was the oldest Palestinian discovery—a bowl of pottery, containing seeds, dwellers, thousands of years before the dawn of civilization, perhaps 5,000 years B.C. or 3000 years before Abraham. Under Gezer was found a tunnel ninety feet long, which had been chipped out of the solid rock with stone axes, a mammoth task.

A type of discovery reveals a degraded cruel state of civilization. Gruesome stone jars, containing the skeletons of male children, not over a week old, found at Gezer, prove that the Canaanites, the dwellers of that land sacrificed their first born male children. The Jews in periods of degeneracy reverted to such sacrifices but were soundly censured by the prophets. This, said Dr. Kent, is a terrible commentary on the awful cruelty, which was associated with debauchery in the ancient days. Results of excavations were shown proving that the Canaanites practised human sacrifice, sacrificing children to ghosts or spirits they would slay a child or adult, walling the body in the foundation of the house or building.

An altar of incense, found at Gezer is of terra cotta and is reminiscent of the influence of pagan nations about Israel.

Mr. R. J. S. Dewar was thanked by Mr. Ernest Wills, Mr. Archibald, of the Collegiate staff introduced Dr. Kent, whom he knew in Nova Scotia as an educator and whom he knew in the army during the war. Rev. Mr. Clarke of Bloomfield, Wills moved a vote of thanks at the close.

LOOKING BACK TO LINK ALL EUROPEAN NATIONS?

The Franco-British conference held at No. 10 Downing St., London, is seen by observers as a possible prelude to an "armed" peace of Europe, designed by combined air forces of Britain and France. The proposals made by and to Simon and Laval, British and French foreign ministers, respectively, add to the long list of European peace-by-non-aggression and military alliance signed during the past year or two. The map indicates the network of these pacts which lead to some confusing results. Britain, for instance, forms no pact with Moscow, but does with France, who has an unofficial military alliance with the Soviet. The Balkan and Russia are in effect, linked by the French agreement.

AT THE CAPITOL

"Menace"
Chills and Thrills Galore in Gripping Picture at Capitol

"Menace" is the appropriate title of the new picture which opens at the Capitol Theatre tomorrow. Recounting a blood-chilling Yarn of three people whose lives are threatened by a madman, it builds its suspense with telling effect and creates a tense atmosphere of fear, sinister and the unusual.

A good cast, which makes the most of the film's many dramatic moments, is headed by Gertrude Michael, Paul Kavanagh, Judge, Henrietta Crossman and Montagu Love.

In "Menace" three people, a charming young girl and two men, one a retired English Colonel and the other an American adventurer, are threatened with death by an unknown maniac who wrongly holds them responsible for his brother's mysterious death.

Added to the main attraction at the Capitol is a comedy entitled "Jane" which is a keen, penetrating, though whimsical analysis of the feminine mind and his Babble is the eternal Eve that he painted her—and Miss Repetto turns in brilliant portrayal of his heroine most vividly.

Although the police have been summoned, the intended victims are afraid that only a man of serious-minded Cavin and mischievously delights in watching him endeavor to find the romantic yoke.

Everyone's sympathy also goes at on the attempts of the simple village weavers to break their industrial bondage and when Babble takes Gavin to the hilltop and persuades him to blow the horn, warning the townsfolk that the hated soldiers, the soldiers, one finds the incident not only highly dramatic, but appealing.

Compact with human touches, this R.K.O. Radio picture is embroidered with countless details of Babble's charm, and the whole story is played against a background of romance with life in the quaint and colorful Scottish village of Kirkby.

Katherine Hepburn makes Babble a powerful study of pathos and persuasive arts. John Beal plays the role of Gavin the little Minister" with due authority and touches the quaint pathos. Alan Hale is properly villainous as Rob Dow, the village ruffian. The sensitive hand of director Richard Wallace was all that was needed to give the picture that little touch it needed, and to weld together the performance of the star and the large and splendid supporting cast.

The Belle Laird News Flashes, "Radio Rhythm Rascals," a tuneful Harlem-in full color will be exhibited the same program.

Performances start daily at 2:30, 7:10 and 9:10 the feature attraction starting at 2:50, 7:30 and 9:30 p.m.

AT THE PLAZA

"The Little Minister"
Barrie's Masterpiece Ideal For Screen

Ever since Maude Adams humanized the lovable character of Babbie in Sir James Barrie's four-a-de-her forgotten story and play, "The Little Minister", this quaint creation has had endeared itself to theatre-goers everywhere.

And now Katherine Hepburn has made a splendid interpretation of the role in the new all-star talking picture for RKO-Radio, now on the Belle Theatre.

Hollywood's lavish resources have been drawn upon to the limit in regard to production, cast, detail, intimate touches, backgrounds, color, romance and interpretations.

There is the appealing romance of the little pastor, Gavin Dishart, for Babbie—a romance that tugs at the heart and engenders a fine sentiment enchanting to the beholder.

Babbie returns his love with all the nature of her sex and to this love Hepburn is said to give a depth of tenderness and spirit which only she has never before revealed.

Sir James' theme is a keen, penetrating, though whimsical analysis of the feminine mind and his Babbie is the eternal Eve that he painted her—and Miss Hepburn turns in brilliant portrayal of his heroine most vividly.

Although the police have been summoned, the intended victims are afraid that only a man of serious-minded Cavin and mischievously delights in watching him endeavor to find the romantic yoke.

ANNIVERSARY OF "BLOODY TUESDAY" IS RIOTOUS AFFAIR

Break Through Cordon

A group of 30 or 40 persons shouted down the speakers and when the Prefect of Police walked down the aisle with Premier Plandin and approached the chamber's mezzanine doors.

The fear of an attack on Plandin caused a flurry among the police, when a man broke through their cordon and ran toward the Premier. He was arrested but told the authorities he rushed only to tell the chief of government of the country's troubles. He was unarmed.

The great crowd which poured into the cathedral threatened several times to panic the police lines that kept apart and, at several times, the police were on the point of charging into the crowd. Order was restored there, however, and the clash came finally when about 200 demonstrating youths blocked the Place St. Michael and refused to move until they were driven off.

In the meantime, marching columns of Royalists and other dissidents threatened trouble around the Communist Chamber. The Royalists tore down Socialist posters, which had been put up during the night, and replaced them with Royalist bills bearing down manifestos printed by the Royalists. They also tore down government posters, which ordered university classes suspended.

Splash Red Paint

Red paint splashed in the Place de la Concorde provided a vivid reminder of the fatal rioting of a year ago.

Splotches of red paint appeared on statues and the bridge in the Place Concorde, in memory of the victims of the rioting fell before police bullets. Red inscriptions were painted on many walls overnight and defiant posters blossomed in many quarters.

Police accused Communists, one of whom was arrested, of splashing paint brushes as an expression of their defiance. Others interpreted the red splashes as intended to symbolize the blood that flowed during the clashes.

Wreaths and masses of flowers commemorated those who perished at the south side of the Place de la Concorde. The largest tributes came from the Duke of Guise, pretender to the old French throne.

GEO. MOUNTENAY GIVEN 3 YEARS

Pleads Guilty to Theft of Furniture From Several Cottages

Trenton, Feb. 6 (Special)—George Mountenay who was apprehended by the local police a week ago, was sentenced to serve three years in Kingston penitentiary when he, on pleading guilty to breaking into a number of summer cottages and stealing almost a truck load of furnishings. Mountenay had served a term in Guelph Reformatory which was committed in Trenton in 1930. It was a truck load of furniture and other plunder was burned as he did not have a fire. Magistrate Butler said he saw that the reformatory did not do much in the way of teaching the accused a lesson. After passing sentence, Mountenay thanked his worship.

Among the cottages entered were those owned by Ed. A. Simmons, Charles M. Foster, James Reddick and Flight Lieut. Geo. A. Mercer, all of Rednick Beach. Mr. Norman Kidd and Dr. Kidd's cottages across the bay were also entered, many others. Mr. Norman Kidd has had his cottage broken into five different times and on each occasion lost part of his furnishings. Mountenay owned about three miles from Trenton on the Carrying Place road and was married five months ago.

Several drunks also appeared on the list for Monday's court. Two youths were sentenced to a month in Belleville for selling clothing, the property of the government, at the airport. A family feud was again brought before the court at the same time being.

Eastern Star Holds Birthday.

The eleventh anniversary of the formation of the Trenton Chapter, No. 118 of the Order of Eastern Star was royally celebrated in the chapter rooms, Dundas street, in the form of a birthday party. The banquet was open to the members and their guests. Mrs. Lulu Twiddy, Worthy Matron of the local chapter, presided. In her address she graphically outlined the history of the Order since the organization to date of the present day.

Mr. Twiddy, Past Worthy Patron was toastmaster of the memorial occasion. Ed. A. Simmons, Past Worthy Patron, proposed a toast to the "king" and was responded to with the entire gathering singing "God Save the King". Mrs. Harry Gray, Past Worthy Matron, proposed a toast to the guests which was ably responded to by Dr. Kerr Couch. Mr. F. Weseda of Belleville, Past Worshipful Patron of Belleville Chapter No. 53, proposed a toast to the "Grand Chapter". Mrs. Anna Bowe of Belleville, Past Worthy Grand Matron of the Grand Chapter of Ontario, elegantly responded. Mr. Charles Bowe, convener of the program had arranged a varied and interesting program of entertainment which included songs by Miss Flora MacDonald and Earl Gray. Miss Laura Robinson gave two readings which were well received.

Community singing was led by Mr. E. F. Joyce.

MUSIC

Artists Chosen To Appear Here

The choice of artists made by the local artists' committee for appearance in Belleville in a local series of concerts has been confirmed by the Toronto office of the Columbia Concert Association.

The first concert will be given by the nineteen year old Canadian girl violinist, Miss Mary Trimble, winner of a phenomenal sensation in Sweden, Norway and in the cities of London, Berlin and San Francisco and just recently at Massey Hall, Toronto.

The second concert will be given by the popular young two-piano team, Dohnanyi and Ratzer, Vienna recently returned from engagements in Ottawa and Montreal.

The series ends with a concert by the Russian baritone, Adolph Bakroff, whose popularity this last summer, as guest artist with the symphony orchestra under Reginald Stewart in Toronto, brought him a return engagement there.

Each of these artists will appear here in an afternoon concert for the students of the Collegiate gratis. Their concerts will be given in the evenings for the members of the concert association.

CONGRESS FAVORS INSURANCE BILL

to be paid," that no diminution in the benefits would be made and that a five-day week prevailed."

Then he pointed out that the bill it could seem, says Mr. Moore, that from 18 months to two years must elapse before its benefits become operative. Exemptions under the bill entitled to immediate benefits emphasized the necessity of putting into effect every effort to provide employment.

Mr. Moore asked for Labor members to support the humanities proposed in the bill.

The Congress agreed with the government's proposal to bring employment services under Dominion administration.

The unemployment insurance committee should be the final authority under the act, and not the exchequer court, the spokesman said.

Prime Minister R. B. Bennett congratulated Mr. Moore on the character of his remarks. He could only reveal in general terms, prior to any representations that contained so much commendation.

Taking up point by point what the Labor spokesman, Mr. Bennett explained that the country had contracted in launching the $40,000,000 public works programme but this had been changed to a programme to the administration's policy of engaging men directly and time required to get plans. A list of further works had been requested from the city and works were necessary and that would serve a most urgent need. The Labor committee said he had been surprised at the smallness of the list.

He remembered the delegation, however, last year in order to give employment to the people the government had undertaken repairs of every public building from Vancouver to Halifax. This had the effect of stimulating private repairs to buildings.

"Unitary Power" Basis

The Unemployment Insurance convention had been framed on the basis of "unitary power", Canada's distribution of powers having to ratify one part of it and not the whole act.

The Premier declared unemployment relief camps existed solely to prevent young men from becoming "derelict wanderers over the face of the land." He pointed out that 19,000 youths had been absorbed in useful employment since they were opened. He said there were 6,000 less normal years before the depression there had been three years ago.

Considerable body of seasonally unemployed men in Canada. The 10-year average was 150,000 a year.

Turning to the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Prime Minister declared it embodied as far as was possible, having regard to Canadian conditions, the bill passed last year in England. There would never be an instance, meanwhile, without some receiving larger benefits for less payment. The Government proposed to keep up unemployment insurance out of politics.

The Government contemplated an Old Age Pension scheme similar to that in the United Kingdom where people purchased National Savings certificates.

MEN 'RATTED,' COUNSEL CHARGES

serious crime and that alone is for your judgment."

He said the three charges on the indictments all revolved upon the one act of kidnapping.

Belleville and local forces of the police and legal talent utilized in the Crown's prosecution of the defence's charges. Of these he compared the attorneys, three including himself, and the lack of money for investigation.

Meisner had had but $400 when arrested. Only $75 had been put aside for the conduct of the case. No other money had been received and none was expected, he said.

"If he had the case to keep his barrister's oath, that he would refuse no just cause."

Proof Necessary

"Ten thousand suspicions marshalled against a man do not prove him guilty. You must rely on proof, proof."

Evidence had been introduced to show there was a kidnapping—absurdities—but it had to be proven beyond a shadow of doubt that there actually were such acts before one step further could be taken.

Hall recalled Corbett had said he had been asked by his employers "Do you know of any good payrolls?" Some time, when asking their captive to become an accomplice :> a robbery, Hall said.

"Do you believe that any such words were ever spoken? Yet John Corbett swore to it. It is not for me to explain this."

He referred to the drive of Labatt's to a Muskoka cottage by his alleged abductors. The car had stopped four times for gasoline and provisions. Why did not Labatt call for help? "If I had been in that position I would have called so loudly you could have heard me from here to Woodstock," continued Bell.

POLICE LIEUTENANT IS INTERROGATED

Questio..s of Prints on Ladder is Taken Up

(By William A. Kinney)

(Copyright 1935 by the Associated Press)

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 6.—Bruno Richard Hauptmann's counsel fighting to prove the dead leader had got the Lindbergh $50,000 ransom was temporarily balked today in an attempt to show Fisch exhibited gold notes in 1933.

Fisch, on the witness stand, on whether Oscar John Bruchmann, Bronx taxi driver once employed by Fisch, could answer a question pertaining to the alleged gold notes had not been reached by the court.

Reilly's Purpose

Edward J. Reilly, defence chief Attorney, in answer to objection by Attorney General David T. Wilentz, declared Bruchmann's testimony was offered "for the purpose of showing the sudden affluence of Fisch and his wealth and his display of certain gold-back bills he had in May, 1933."

Absence of Prints

Flemington, Feb. 6.—The defence in the murder trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann today emphasized absence of Hauptmann's fingerprints on the Lindbergh kidnap ladder and pursued further its contention the dead Isador Fisch was the receiver of the $50,000 Lindbergh ransom.

The defence called Lieut. Paul Stamler of the state police of New Jersey to the witness chair to identify, and none of these were Hauptmann's.

The prosecution immediately brought out if Hauptmann had handled the ladder and had worn gloves, his fingerprints would not be found.

Says Fisch Took Pay Away

Sam Sturgeone, Bronx radio repairman who acknowledged on cross examination he had been in an institution for a depressive psychosis, said Fisch called for a repaired radio in May, 1933, and left a shoe box with him for 24 hours, picking it up again himself.

Hauptmann claimed that Fisch, now dead, left a shoe box with him on December 2, 1932, and he (Hauptmann) when arrested in 1934 retained $14,600 in Lindbergh ransom bills.

Attorney General Wilentz quashed Hauptmann's

Q.—How many times have you been in an institution because of mental illness?

A.—I'd make it about five times.

A.—No.

Q.—And another time you wrote him? Right letters?

A.—Abusive language, yes sir.

Mentally Maladjusted

Strepponi said he was merely feeling "depressed" on the occasions he entered the hospital but that doctors called his affliment "mental disturbance" and "maladjustment."

He insisted he was not suffering from any mental ill at the moment.

On cross-examination Strepponi he had returned to Bellevue hospital, in July, 1934, for a mental condition.

"You have been in an institution since then?" asked Wilentz.

—Yes, sir.

The defence counsel took Lieut. Sjestrom through a description of the methods used in taking pictures of parts of the ladder.

Q.—How many photographs were taken of the ladder?

A.—68.

Q.—Does that mean you got 68 fingerprints?

A.—There were approximately 15 times as many as those photographed.

Q.—You Prints Hauptmann's

Q.—You didn't find any fingerprints with the State police methods?

A.—No.

The investigator said the State police had examined the ladder immediately after their arrival at the estate after the crime and found no prints.

Q.—Now you ran down the identities of those fingerprints you found on the ladder?

A.—Some.

Q.—How many were identified?

A.—Four.

Q.—But at any time you identify the fingerprints of this defendant, Richard Hauptmann?

A.—No.

"Take the witness," said Plaher, Wilentz bowing in acknowledgment.

Q.—If this defendant wore gloves, his fingerprints wouldn't show?

A.—Yes.

Plaher intervened to ask.

Q.—A mother or a nurse putting Baby Lindbergh to bed would leave in your experience?

A.—Not in my experience.

Wilentz began his direct handling by several persons would probably obliterate original prints, making them worthless.

VILLANS TAKE SAILORS BY 3-2

Hamilton Win by U. of T. And Assured of First Place

(By the Canadian Press)

Just why Oakville Villans and Fort Colborne Sailors are staging such a terrific struggle for third place in the Senior "A" Ontario Hockey Association race could not be readily understood today because the league place issue is almost certain to met the powerful, League-leading Hamilton Tigers in the playoffs.

In one of the two senior games played in Toronto last night—a rare occurrence in itself—the Villans and the Sailors continued their bitter battle of last Friday and again Oakville triumphed, this time by a 3-2 count.

First place practically is conceded to the Tigers, who defeated the winless University of Toronto Blue Jackets 4-3 at Varsity Arena in the other Toronto game scheduled. The Associated Hockey Club, only title squad to meet the third place Sailors twice last night, are firmly entrenched in second position. Therefore, by the playoff system, Hamilton will meet the third placers and Toronto will battle the fourth finishers for the right to meet the Tigers for the Crown won by the Tigers last season.

The Villan-Sailors struggle was costly to both teams. Early in the third period, Garnet Bell, Oakville ace, crashed into the board and was carried from the ice with a badly bruised hip. The injury will keep the fleet forward from the wars for at least a week.

Rangers Run String to 13 Games Without Defeat by Taking Maroons in Montreal

Bun Cook Bags Winning Goal With Sixteen Seconds to Play

BOSTON WINS

Defeat Red Wings, While St. Louis Ties The Americans

By ELMER DULMAGE

An upward march by the New York Rangers that caused some early uplifting of National Hockey League eyebrows has developed into an astonishing parade through all January and into this short month. Today the old boys and young 'uns of Lester Patrick are on the up-and-upgrading.

They went into Montreal last night and ran their string to thirteen games without a defeat by upending the Maroons 4-3. They were outshot by two to one, which had nothing whatever to do with the result because Dave Kerr, former Maroon goal-tender, was very firm in the Ranger cage.

Sixteen seconds from the end of the third period, just when the Maroons seemed to have definitely quelled the New Yorkers after a long rally, Bun Cook bagged the winning goal. He accepted a pass from Ott Heller and then from close range, the puck trickling over the line.

Starting cautiously in his way, this smashing drive by the Rangers is now threatening the moment by a steady Chicago machine that has not lost a game in the last seven starts. The Hawks defeated Montreal Canadiens 4-1 last night to increase their edge ahead of Rangers and three up on Boston Bruins who lost to Detroit by beating the sinking Detroit Red Wings 4-2.

It was a clean sweep for the one-two-three teams of the American section, but the Rangers, who have not dated defeat since New Year's night, picked up more immediate glory, if nothing else, than the rest. The thirteenth game since the string started was no barrier.

Heller and Keeling Good.

Ott Heller, the fleet defenceman from Kitchener and Butch Keeling, a fine money player who performs on the third forward line, contributed big shares to the triumph. Keeling scored late in the first period and again in the second to get Rangers back in the running after Maroons had ran into a two-goal lead through Earl Robison and Baldy Northcott.

Bun Cook carried on the good work from that point but it was a saw struggle to the finish. Bun got one and Rookie Bill Miller matched it for Maroons. Bert Connolly got another for the bloodthirsty and Robinson matched this one for the fighting Montrealers. There was no time for another rally after the goal crease in the manner of the late Charlie Gardiner, starred early forty shots. At the other end Alex Connell had only to handle twenty from the enemy.

In a fast game at Chicago the Hawks spotted Canadiens a first-period goal and then showed unexpected power in ramming in four for a decisive win. Leroy Goldsworthy, an ex-Hawk, got the only Montreal goal. Paul Thompson and Wiseman scored for Chicago in the second period and Johnny Gottselig in the third. Cook contributed additional tallies in the third.

The aging Boston team, who has been clear of the injury jinx this season in a Hawk uniform, was tamed in the second period. His arm was slightly bruised and the veteran speedster did not come out for the third session.

Sands is Limelight.

Young Charlie Sands, former Toronto player, had a good deal to do with Boston's win over Detroit. The sport Arthur, Ont., winger scored two goals and assisted in a third, scored by Nels Stewart. Marty Barry got the other. Only in the first half of the game did the Red Wings stand effectively. Herbie Lewis scored both Detroit goals, ensign Cooney Weiland's pass.

New York Americans had to come from behind twice to get a 3-3 tie with St. Louis Eagles at New York. Lorne Chabot, the team's goalie, was the star of the Americans and then it was the Eagles' turn to rally. Then Bill Brydge in the penalty box Glen Brydson shot the final tying goal.

Syd Howe and Carl Voss shared the first two St. Louis goals and Lorne Carr and Sweeney Schriner counted for the Americans who set the pace in fourth place in the Canadian section.

STUDENTS WIN

Move Into First Place With a Win Over Trent Cottons

Benedicts 4-Brighton 0

Playing a far better style of hockey, the Ben edict-Proctor team defeated the Brighton team 4-0 for the first shut-out of the season. The game was a concerned, fought-on have plenty, but the good combination of the star-player paved their defeat. Bob Cottrell was especially good on the ice and was Chester McKinnon, Blakely, Wells, Mattis and Miller took all the scoring honors. The teams as well matched and will both be in the play-offs, if our guess is not wrong. Stan Cottrell, lanky defenceman for the Benedicts has long been famed for collisions, his brother in the net also got a cut over his eye.

Lambert was the chief threat of the visitors with Smith and Waddling playing good. Miller, Mattis Wells and Blakely were the pick of the winners.

GAME TONIGHT IS A NATURAL

Petes Have to Win to Finish in First Place

Belleville and Peterboro intermediate O.H.A. clubs will provide the fire-works at the Belleville arena in a game tonight at 8.30 o'clock match tonight. After being forced to accept a 5-4 defeat at the feet in the Littlock City on Monday night, the Thomas-led aggregation are out for revenge and to stop the scoring orgy of Willie Caladine, Peterboro's ace scoring threat.

For over fifty minutes on Monday night the Petes completely had away and continually carried the play to over-shadow the Petes in every department but apparently the locals slipped momentarily to endeavour and the defending leaders which proved their downfall. The Thomas-led aggregation now realize the folly of reverting to defensive play after having led the Petes with speed and combination for the majority of the game. Manager Thomas announced today that he would send his charges out with instructions to play a wide game throughout feeling that after watching Monday night's performance the locals have more speed and scoring punch while playing offensive hockey.

Monday night's reverse eliminates the Petes from further chances of getting above third position, an assured play-off berth but a reverse for Eddie Wright's charges would place them in range for entire picture of the group standing, as the Petes must win tonight to assure themselves of playing in first position. The Petes will be at full strength, while the "Combines" will be assisted by the acquisition of Johnnie Connors, certified Chief Store City Leaguer, who starred for the locals in Lindsay recently. Wright's decision to use the Petes in battle to be assisted by his stalwart wing mates Tuesday and Eddie Red Crighton, who was injured on Monday night when he fell into the progressed sufficiently to allow him to take his place alongside of Bill Lamport was the only change in the locals' lineup. Cadd go to make up a fine defence in front of Lamport, Walker and Lyle being the basebell fame.

Following the splendid exhibition given by Covert, Powers and Carl Morgan in Peterboro on Monday last line intact for tonight," stated Manager Thomas as he lauded the trio after Monday night's game. "I played good enough hockey to win nine out of ten ordinary games, but we slipped slightly when it hurt. Together another game and there will be another story told after the fracas," added Skipper Thomas in confident tone. Powers and Covert are rush for reserved seats was reported at the arena this morning which intimated that the largest crowd of the season would be on hand for this important tilt tonight.

REPORTED DEFENCE WITNESSES LEAVE

Alibi Witnesses For Meisner Said to Have Left Town

London, Ont., Feb. 6—(CP)—Reports that two defence witnesses from Covington, Ky., had left London in the midst of the opening rally by David Meisner's legal battery, cutting short attempts to establish an alibi for Meisner at the time of the kidnapping of John S. Lasati, clouded the fifth trial day in the action this morning.

Leroy Hall, Covington police detective, who started testifying for the defence yesterday and directly Albert Seltzer, who was to have been the next witness called, checked out of the hotel, where they were staying last night. It was reported they had gone back to the United States.

At 10 o'clock this morning C. W. Bell, K.C., could call for Hall to take the witness stand and be further cross-examined by Crown Counsel. All London wonders whether the tall, thick-set detective will be in court to answer the call. He couldn't be found last night.

Advices from Windsor were that Seltzer crossed the border into Detroit. No one seemed to know whether he intended returning to London. Howard Cluff, associate defence counsel, said simply: "I can't say anything about it."

Petes Protest Armstrong as Bell Handler

Apparently Peterboro hockey clubowners want to win the game here tonight or lose. The local intermediate boss, as they have protested Army Armstrong of Oshawa, who was named as referee and Eddie Thomas received word late today, that Frank Crossett of Port Hope, had been appointed by the O.H.A. to handle the tilt.

If Peterboro can win the game they will finish in first place but if on the other hand they lose they will be tied for the top rung with Belleville and they will be required to take a playoff game for the title. Crossett is the contesting Army Armstrong of Oshawa, is like drawing a red rag before a bull to the Armstrong although he at one time resided in Belleville. However, he is and a first class arbiter and is above any petty things and the Petes will not gain any benefit from their protest.

Crossett has been successful in the refereeing games this winter and the locals are willing to accept him. All they want is a crack at the Peterboro squad to show them they are a better team and the win of Monday night was a fluke. No doubt one of the largest crowds of the season will pack the Arena to night to see these two fast teams in action. Come early and avoid the rush.

KI-Y LEAGUE

Two games of hockey were played in the Ki-Y league last evening at the curling rink under the Y.M.C.A. "A" team downed the "Combines" by a one-sided score of 10 to nil in a bantam series and the Maroons defeated the Canadiens of the Chihawks in a midget tussle.

Illsley led the scorers in the bantam game with four goals and Bill Bell was the pick of the victors. Marlow, Blaker and Lyle being the other marksmen for the victors.

Line-ups—"A" team—Carlton, Weller, Blaker, Illsley, Jones, Lyle and Reed. "Y" "B"—Lummis, G. Lummis, Fleming, Cooper, Lancaster and Cameron.

Referee—Mason.

THE BIG SEVEN

Carl Voss and Syd Howe, former stalwart of St. Louis Eagles shared last place in the National Hockey League's Big Seven today after picking up a couple of points apiece against New York American last night. Their additional points eliminated Marty Barry of Boston, with whom they previously were tied. Howe now stands in the third place ranking of Herb Lewis of Detroit, who displaced his teammate, Larry Aurie.

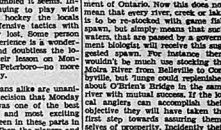
CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

Tonight is red letter night in Belleville sports room—Eddie Wright's Peterboro intermediates are coming to town to do battle with Eddie Thomas' "local squad." According to first-hand reports from the Littlock City, the "Combines" gave the Petes a swell going over, in every department, on Monday night as they out-scored and out-played the homesters for practically fifty minutes. Just when the locals were within sight of their objective, a victory, they stumbled it seems. Instead of continuing to play wide open offensive hockey the locals reverted to defensive tactics with the result they lost. Some person once said—"experience is a wonderful teacher," and doubtless the locals learned their lesson on Monday night at Peterboro—no more defensive hockey.



Players and fans alike are unanimous in their decision that Monday night's game was one of the best played, fastest and most exciting hockey games seen in these parts in many moons. When the players and fans of a losing club crowd pack high in praise of the game, even in defeat, it must have been a wow or should one say "a pip". Tonight's return game should be no exception to the rule and should see the locals Petes are in a tough spot this eve. If the "Combines" smear Eddie Wright's charges tonight and don't run for it, then when the Petes and the Maroons will be tied for first place, each having two losses. If the Petes come on in front, good—however, it will leave them in first place, the Maroons in second and Belleville in third. Naturally it is to the advantage of the "Combines" to beat the Petes and the Maroons into an extra series with the Marlies, as they have shown that they are well earned rest. Tonight will be the locals' fifth game in seven playing days.

Thus far this season the Belleville intermediates have scored 81 goals in nine games for an average of nine goals per game. Their opposition have scored 82 goals against the locals. Cobourg with a total of nine notches leading all teams in goals scored against Belleville. The locals' goals gives an average of a little over five per game scored against six of the aggregate goals scored by Lyle, Lamport and Harry Morgan, who shared right wing alongside of Covert and Carl, have finished the red hot pace at times, thus giving the regular front line a total of 45 goals for an average of 31 goals. Jimmie Ethier, who has played only six games, has bagged four goals and given an equal number of passes. Every member of the Belleville club has materially assisted in the cause of the team by either giving well-timed passes or scoring goals. "May they flatten their averages tonight."

As is their custom at this time each year the Belleville Angler's Association commenced their year's activities recently and re-appointed R. E. Shortt as president, Joe has labored long towards the betterment of fishing in this surrounding community and it was partially through his efforts, that the angler's club came into being in Belleville. One excellent recommendation was passed at their last meeting, namely the question of having all available waters in Hastings-Prince Edward with game fish by the Game and Fisheries Department of Ontario. Now this does not mean that every river, creek or lake is to be re-stocked with game fish spawn, but simply means that such waters, that are passed by a government biologist will receive this suggested spawn. For instance, there wouldn't be much use stocking the Moira River from Belleville to Corbyville, but Tunge could replenished from Corbyville Bridge to the same river with mutual success. If the local anglers can accomplish their objective they will have taken the first step towards assuring themselves of prosperity. Incidently their annual fly and plug casting practises will commence in the Armouries soon, while the usual lantern motion pictures and lectures will precede the annual banquet demonstration of casting by experts from the Toronto Anglers' Club is also being planned, all interested in fishing, no matter how small, should commence to take an interest in the local Ki-Y Hockey League. The remaining group champions have not been decided as yet, but all games be played as quickly as possible as the ice conditions will not be long enjoyed.

With reference to Monday night's Belleville at Peterboro intermediate O.H.A. game the Peterboro sport scribe writes:

"The customers who purchased a ticket in the Petes last year, at least those we've talked to, tell us they were handed a hotsy-totsy number and consider the admission price the Petes' 8-Tine Belleville. Must have been a sweetheart of a struggle seeing as how the Petes were down 5-2 with just 15 minutes left, and still got under the wire by the skinny margin! According to the scoring and summaries one is led to believe that it was a case of Covert vs. Calladine as far as tallying effectiveness goes, but of course scoring is only one phase of the game. These boys must have played a beautiful game but tis whispered their teammates went to town too. Weir and Cadd also were outstanding for the locals, with the others just about as good. Over a thousand fans had plenty to yocel about."

Hockey Owes Greatest Debt For Growth and Strength To Pro System, Says Calder

FRANK CALDLR, N. H. L. President

By WILLIAM EDGAR

Central Press Canadian Correspondent

Montreal, Feb. 6—Greater stability of hockey to-day is the outstanding change that has developed in the organization of the game during the past two decades, in the belief of Frank Calder who this season completed 20 years as president of the National Hockey League. To the adoption of out-and-out professionalism and professional methods, Mr. Calder attributes chiefly the credit for this satisfactory development.

The long life of the National Hockey League is in itself a testimony to the efficacy of the modern system, according to Mr. Calder.

"Thirty-five years ago, hockey leagues were organized quickly and as quickly disappeared", he explained. "There were few that existed longer than three or five years. Before professionalism was officially recognized, there was always suspicion attaching to the amateur clubs. Doubts about the bona fides of the amateurs were seldom absent although nobody proved anything. Those who were in a position to know exactly the validity of these doubts were the least inclined to talk on the subject. Professionalism was winked at by some and completely ignored by others. Open and above-board professionalism was adopted after a long period of growth. It occasioned a great deal of controversy which is now pretty much extinguished.

Game Improved

"Right away the beneficial effects of professionalism became evident in the organization of the clubs. Since the clubs were paying the players, they were able to exercise control over them. Players appeared when they were expected. As things had been before that, a club was never sure whether its best players would turn up to take part in games for which they were scheduled, or whether they might turn out for some other club. Club directors saw to it that players whom they were paying turned out when required.

In spite of this, there was a great deal of public indifference, coupled with criticism, which had to be lived down. Professional hockey was looked upon as something discreditable, alike to the players and those who were connected with it. It was looked upon as falling very far short of the amateur idea and ideal. We have managed to live all that down, along with the accusation that money being the main consideration, games were arranged so as to bring in the greatest amount of it. We still hear to-day echoes of the charge that professional hockey is a money racket. It is true that it takes a great deal of money to keep it going; otherwise it would not go at all. Games are now played at places much farther apart; costly arenas are needed in which to hold them; all of which involves heavy expenditures which have to be met out of the proceeds."

"Professional Hockey has passed through two stages. From 1912 until 1924, the struggle was hard and going was difficult. Competition from amateur clubs was keen, the public on the whole was apathetic and the lingering suspicions that had greeted the adoption of professionalism were not effectively dissipated until the end of that period. All these factors have become negligible now. From 1924, the game took on a new lease of life, when the United States clubs entered the National Hockey League. Hockey in the United States, of course, was nothing new. It had been played in that country nearly as long as in Canada. There were hockey clubs in New York, Boston, Philadelphia and Pittsburg as far back as 1900. The game had declined a bit in the United States, but there was a sort of revival when Boston, New York, Pittsburg and Chicago joined the league. Soon afterwards, however, business conditions became poor. Business and organized sport are affected by the same conditions and we had our share of troubles, but we pulled through."

Standard Higher

On one point Mr. Calder is emphatic and that is that the standard of the game is higher today than it was twenty years ago. "There is no comparison between the two periods in this respect. The standard today is far better in every way. Old timers will probably be very much in disagreement with me on that point. But in my opinion, the present game compares advantageously with the old one, both individually and collectively. Twenty years ago, it is true, there were a few outstanding players who could hold their own with any of today but there were not so many of these stars then as there are today. That reflection, curiously enough, raises a point that shows where we are now at a standstill. The indications are that there will not be so many first-class players in the near future. We are not developing men to fill the places of our best players of to-day when they drop out. We have lots of recruits. We have aspirants by the carload, yet it is difficult to pick out good prospects from among them.

Aided Amateur Hockey

Mr. Calder thinks that the introduction of professionalism has been a good thing for the amateur branch of the sport. "It gives the amateur a higher standard of play by which to measure," he averred. "Then, practically every amateur whether he acknowledges it or not, has ambitions of becoming a professional. Every kid who is handling a hockey stick has that idea also, and dreams of becoming a Morenz, a Blinco or a Stewart." There was a hint of regret in Mr. Calder's voice as he spoke of the disappearance from the circuit of the smaller Canadian cities, Quebec, Ottawa and Hamilton, which had clubs in the league in its early days. He attributes the failure of these cities to maintain a club in the league to one cause; lack of population sufficient to produce a sustaining attendance. In proportion to their population, Mr. Calder maintains, the smaller centres gave more loyal support than the larger, "If New York's attendance were in the same proportions to population as were Ottawa's, Madison Square Gardens would have to be capable of seating 200,000," is his way of putting it.

The cost of erection and maintenance of an arena coupled with the fact that there are only 24 playing nights in which to secure the revenue to pay the club's way proved to be the stumbling blocks in the paths of National League hockey in the smaller centres.

Incidentally, Mr. Calder declares that the first ice hockey rules were drawn up in Montreal—by a group of McGill students who had taken up the game. The writer of these rules, R. F. Smith is still living in Verdun. The waterfront at Montreal was the scene of these early games, which were an adaptation of bandy ball, brought from Great Britain, where it had been played in the frozen fields in winter. The change from a round ball to the puck was one of the first modifications on this side. It is only fair to add that Montreal's primacy in the sport is challenged by its early nineteenth century rival, Kingston, which claims to have been the battleground of rival teams a game or two earlier than Montreal.

Aajmaa Athletic Weekly Chronicle

Back again to general routine—by special request—we will in future enlighten the readers every Tuesday on the activities, knocks and boosts and everything that may be of interest to the members and the public.

It has been almost two months since the last publication of the Weekly Chronicle and although we are long overdue in wishing the supporters a Happy and Prosperous New Year we are wishing you that whole-heartedly now.

Many of the activities have appeared elsewhere in the Daily Ontario Intelligencer but we are informing those who haven't heard before that Mrs. Blaker won first and Mrs. Donovan second in December's high aggregate euchre.

Advised by many of the patrons the club is now sponsoring euchre on Monday evenings and Friday afternoons, while bridge is Wednesday afternoon and Thursday evenings. The prizes are exceptionally good and the surroundings have been beautifully redecorated in blue, gold and white walls with purple and gold overdrapes. Card players may come earlier than advertised time and listen to various radio programmes until playing time.

Barrel Jumping—Jack Murphy, Belleville's local speed skater gave an excellent exhibition of barrel jumping at the carnival recently. Jack was wearing a new sweater in the "Aajmaa Club" colors of white background with purple and gold trimmings. He was conspicuous with number 13, his lucky number.

Hockey—The Aajmaa Club hockey team didn't do as good as was expected when the team was being lined up. With Harold Mott only allowed two games by the northern league, various players lining up with other teams, and the Albert College players being barred by the faculty from participating: the Aajmaa team didn't do too badly. Vic Rowbotham, Stanley Amo, Joe Mattis were the standards whilst Meens, Blaker, Sleeman, Roy and Bleekman labored for the cause of the club. Harold Mott in the two games he played was the sterling star of the team. The club is planning on a few exhibition games.

Not the "Aajmaa Club"—Owing to the members working for other organizations and the public believing that the "Aajmaa Club" is sponsoring these programmes, has led us to make public that we are not connected with any organization, tickets or programmes where the name 'Aajmaa Club' is not advertised either in the advertisements, tickets or programmes. The "Aajmaa Club" is not responsible for any contracts made or broken unless signed by the president and the secretary.

Box Lacrosse on Ice—'Tis rumored that the "Aajmaa Club" may have a game or two of box lacrosse on ice in the local arena gardens. Cobourg and Peterboro would be the opponents. It would be sponsored with a hockey match between two city league teams of the places mentioned. Joe Gould is all for a game of lacrosse, so is Doug Powers for that matter. Ed Goodier, Carl Morgan, the two Day boys, Jack Murphy, Lionel Watson, Slim Burdes and Fred Gibbs would make an exceptionally good team.

DOUBLE REFEREES AS EXPERIMENT IN ENGLISH FOOTBALL

An experiment in using two referees for a football match in place of the usual solitary arbiter, was tried at the amateur international trial match between North and South at Chester, England. Above are shown the two referees, E. Wood and Dr. A. W. Barton with the two team captains as they made the toss-up.

FINISHED SECOND

Though Alex Hurd captured all the main glory at the western U.S. speed-skating championships in the Chicago stadium, Frank Stack, of Winnipeg, finished second to his fellow-countryman in all three events won by Hurd. They were the two-mile, one-mile and 440 yard stretches.

CANADIAN WINNER AT U.S. SKATING MEET

Smashing the United States national record for the two-mile distance and sweeping to victory in every class A event scheduled, Alex Hurd, speed-skating streak from Kirkland Lake, Ont., won the western U.S. speed-skating crown at Chicago Stadium. He won the two-mile event in 5.59 3-10, clipping 1-10 second from the record, and then went on to capture the 440-yard and the one-mile events.

SPEEDY WINNER OF U.S. JUNIOR EVENTS

To make almost a clean sweep in the men's speed skating events of the western U.S. skating championships at Chicago, Orel Duffy, of Toronto, climaxed Alex Hurd's great wins in the senior races by romping home in front in the mile-and half-mile events for boys under 18. Duffy shows promise of becoming one of Canada's greatest speed skaters.

GLIDER—Like a glider aeroplane, Harold (Dutch) Smith, Olympic champion takes off in a swan dive at Palm Springs, Cal.

FINAL FALL—Jim Londos manoeuvres Henry Fields into position for the final fall during bout in New York.

Canadian Racket Champions Win Again

CANZONERI WINS HIS 100TH FIGHT

On the comeback trail, Tony Canzoneri, former lightweight champion, won his 100th ring battle by decisively defeating Leo Rodak after Rodak had won 22 straight fights. Canzoneri is shown (Upright), during the bout which was attended by 14,775 Chicago fight fans who paid $33,546.67 to see the fight.

HOLDING THE BAG—Jack Dempsey holds the bag for Vince Dundee as the former middleweight champ trains.

Spite Wife

by Ann Forester

She got up later and later each strungout for happiness—look how morning. Sometimes it was only she had suffered in this last year. side-sixty impatient whining for her breakfast. Her marriage vows had get and for his petty run which baby dead. Her loved one snatched forced her out then to say to away to the other end of the world dream over the morning paper in bread for her reach. Better to drift and not feel too deeply. . . .

Mary came to see her and was shocked. Judy did not realize how blue shade of water outside the win- dow. Why struggle? . . . Why feel too deeply? Look how she had was absolutely frightened!" Mary explained vigorously that night to her husband. He seemed to see eyes and there was an expression she hadn't seen in him for years, in her heart. As though she expected someone to take a stand for her—as she was too proud to duck!" But, Mary-like, she hid this apprehension under a bracing scolding.

"You can't let yourself go like this, Judy! You'll go to seed! You've got to rouse yourself. Get a system into your days and live up to a plan! The British have a system on the tropical island you know . . . Though he was a little bit of a man he always dressed for dinner just to keep himself up to the mark. And you should have a maid; it isn't good to live alone like this!"

But she said Judy meekly "I'll dress for dinner! But not the maid, Mary! I want to be alone. I've always been alone around, all the time!"

Judy faithfully kept her word. She rose at an early hour and took an hour swimming in the tank. And gliding through the limpid pale water, or floating on her back, looking up into the curved marble ceiling, Judy found her mind wandering to the last party at the old beach house. The thunderous roar of grey waves breaking over her head—and Nick's strong brown arms . . . his strength that he acted her out of the surf.

How strange life was, she thought in her waltz, for during the past season so tremendously about Stan . . . Or no, it was not the person she had thought Stan to be. Now she knew that the Stan she had loved had really existed. She had been a loving idolator, bowing down to an image which . . . Judy shook herself.

She found a Chatterly rubber ring to keep up in the city did she enjoy herself. She ate at smart restaurants, she went to smart shows, she belonged to a smart club, tried to be friendly. Judy was conscious that she was "getting by" for half a week after she left the pool, but after that she was no one. She had learned to distrust people.

Mary gave her the gossip of Lookwood. There was much talk of her departure. Among Mary's set, much criticism of Stan for his treatment and his subsequent behavior.

"Stan seems bent on burning himself up as quickly as possible," Mary said one day, as they sat over lunch in Judy's apartment. "He's almost constantly with Dart Towers in the daytime and that hard drinking country club set. And at night he's mostly at Amy's or Eunice's. He and Eunice are back together. I think he's ultra careful about that . . . Eunice's not to give you any loophole to reach him. But they seem together a great deal and Fred Wilcox watching . . . Judy, I tell you, some day that man will blow up! And when he does, heaven help the innocent bystander, because it will be slaughter."

"You mean . . . he's jealous of Stan."

"I mean that Eunice is going to lead herself if you give her enough rope. And, the Lord knows, rope is not missing!" Then Mary abruptly changed the subject.

"See another of your good friends the other day—George's Da Haas. I stopped me on the street and asked about you. Looking for information! Yes, oddly enough, she seemed to know your address. Facility for finding things out. . . .

Eunice . . . Georgia . . . Stan . . . They seemed echoes of another life. It seemed to Judy that she had been in that apartment by herself for a thousand years. Like Mary, she thought a little desperately . . . a ship in a land locked harbor, idly rocking and waiting and . . . Would anything ever happen again!

But not even Judy's wildest imagination could have what the future was crashing down upon her.

A SUFFERING VISITOR

CHAPTER SEVENTY-ONE

The winter rains were a thing of the past, Spring had come to the city. Violets and daffodils and giant red and yellow tulips bloomed on the street-copper flowerstands. San Francisco beamed under a May sun.

Judy had bought a car. A smart little dark blue coupe. Nearly every bright day, with Side-Slip haughtily ecstatically out the window beside her, she drove out to the beach—down along the rolling hills of the coast side—anywhere and everywhere, across down the peninsula to Lookwood.

She had a favorite spot out on the oceanshore road south of the city. A deserted road, where it left the edge of the bluff, the land dropped abruptly away to a tumbling blue ocean beneath. The sun was warm on the sand-dunes and the strong ocean wind came—cool to think—blowing in from China. . . . Sun and wind and wide spaces —they made her think of Nick.

Today she sat in the blue coupe while Side-slip ran joyous circles on the dunes, hoping to scare up cophers.

Judy reread the last letter she had received from Nick. Nine days' mail boat brought her some word—a letter, or some one of the girls would take pity and write. Nick's letter had an apprehensive note.

"I'm worried about you, Judy. Just heard from Mary and she said you looked tired and run down. You mustn't live alone, Judy. You've had too much to upset you in this last year, and you'll get morbid. Just a suggestion — why not send for Martha and let her she care of you. She's there, she was to Ellis, because she loved her—but she's wholesome and loyal and genuinely fond of you. Think it over, dear girl, I'm worried about you—"

Judy folded the letter and leaned back against the padded side of the car. Her eyes were clouded, wistful—there was a faint smile on her face. Nice . . . to have some one care . . . Lonely . . . Lonely . . . It was lonely. . . . Maybe she would send and ask Martha to come and take care of the apartment. It would please Nick . . .

Sun and wind . . . pleasant here in this coast country. If she followed the road far enough to the south she would reach the old Carter home on the shore. The old deserted place where Nick had discovered that he loved her . . .

She looked toward the great range of hills that lifted against the southern sky. The other side of them . . . That was the grade which had caused her such apprehensive moment—was it two years ago—or 2,000 years ago?

May . . . Had May . . . That little dead baby she had held so briefly in her arms. . . .

She tried to hold off the morbid thoughts the useless regrets. Nick wouldn't like this . . . crying alone like this . . . She must snap out of it. . . .

With sudden resolution she whistled for Side-slip who came panting with lolling tongue, and backing the car around, Judy drove back to the city.

Drove back . . . never guessing that she was going to meet fate . . .

Her apartment was golden with early afternoon sunshine when she entered. The balance of the day stretched—a desert before her. She found herself inventing little tasks to occupy her time. That dress—she could take it to the store for the alteration. . . . But she didn't feel like standing for a fitting. Those two cooks from the calculating library. . . . They had a new travel book on China—she liked to read books on China. . . . It seemed to bring her nearer to Nick. . . .

The sound of the doorbell took Judy's insistent breath up, wide-eyed, somehow apprehensive. Mary? Mary did not ring like that! A telegram! Nick! She flew to the electric button which controlled the front door. Watched, startled as a figure stepped from the elevator. And felt her heart sink in a sort of furious disappointment.

A thin woman in shabby finery —Georgia De Haas.

Under the best of circumstances, Judy would not have been glad to see Georgia. Now an almost childish anger burned within her. The face was not eager, her manner not cordial as Georgia came up the hall rapidly. . . .

"Judy . . . I—I'm so glad you're home. I was afraid you might be gone. . . . "

"Oh . . ." said Judy flatly. "Won't you— won't you come in?" The invitation was forced. For instance, but Georgia accepted it.

In the clearer light of the apartment, Judy was able to see that Georgia was agitated. It was not so much that her hair was jammed untidily over her eyes, that one glove was missing. It was the strained expression of her eyes, the tight purring of her boloreless mouth. Georgia was frightened and she suddenly burst out, without taking the chair which the other woman indicated.

"Oh, Judy . . . I'm so worried. I don't know what to do . . . I had to tell some one . . . Judy, I'm afraid I've done something that—that's going to cause a lot of trouble . . . Maybe worse."

"What do you mean?" Judy had not sensed herself. She was looking a back on the unwelcome visitor with level grey-blue eyes. Stormy eyes.

Georgia's answer self-possession. She rapidly swung. She laced her thin fingers together nervously. "Judy . . . you know—you know I know . . . but I do know that Stan is . . . Judy, I'm not sure—but—I went to Fred Wilson, I told him about it—he took a revolver out of his desk drawer and it fell to the floor. . . I tried to get it—but he struck me aside. After—I ran away from his office. It was his downtown office here in the city, you know, Judy. And I thought of you, Judy, he did not mean it— do you think? He won't really—hurt them? I didn't mean that! As God is my witness, I didn't mean that, Judy! Judge—say you believe me! I just wanted to—to teach Eunice a lesson for being so rotten to me. But—I didn't mean to really hurt her. And Stan—He laughed at me—and it made me furious. But I don't want them hurt! He didn't mean that—Fred Wilson didn't, did he, Judy? He'll calm down —he won't really shoot Stan. . . .

Crazed with fear and remorse, Georgia was swaying Judy, clutching her arm, her face distorted, tears rolling into her mouth.

Judy struck her across the face. "Shut up! If you set hysterical now! I've got to think!"

Little Benny's Note Book

This morning pop found ma's diamond ring on the bathroom washstand again and struck it in his vest pocket to teach her another lesson not to be careless with it and tonite after supper ma started to look through her handbag with a worried expression, and me and pop gave each other a knowing look and pop says, "What are you looking for, ma'deer, one of the lost tribes of Isreel?

O po, in fact nothing in particuler, ma said.

And she kept on looking, saying, There was something in here this morning that seems to of taken unspeakable wings, although such a thing is impossible because I always have been out of my constant site all day, so there can be anything to worry about and that's why I'm not actually worrying.

Well G, ma didn't you notice an odacious character hanging around or anything? I said, and ma said, There was never downtown that I gave a few minutes to just to get rid of him. . . . I may say his face didn't look like a monument to whoever interested himself and kept looking greatly into my bag, but he could hardly of taken anything out with me standing rite there holding it. Or do you bleave the hand can be quicker than the eye Willyum? she said.

It must be sometimes, or else there would never be such a thing as a poke in the eye, pop said, Let's just for the purpose of the experiment used to do a little juggling, when I was young and had real ambition. Yoo hoo! pop he open and I'll see if I can snatch something out of whoever your seeing me, he said, and ma said, That's impossible, but letz try.

And she held out her bag and pop took his fingers out of his vest pocket and made a quick move over the bag, ma saying, Your hand didn't even went in it at all, I could see perfeckly.

And she looked in the bag, saying, O, here it is, it was here all a time, and pop said, What's that? and ma said, O nothing, to mention.

And she kept on looking like somebody feeling better instead of worse, and pop didn't ask any more questions, and I guess pop was thinking she had her lesson without even knowing she needed it.

Tarzan faced the girl, unmoved by her beauty. A sudden scowl of surprise and anger came over his face as he saw against her soft white throat the diamond-studded, golden locket of his youth.

His mother's precious momento had been stolen from his own mate when Terkoz, the Red (echoes the ape-man now hunted) had slain her. "Roughly Tarzan grasped the girl, demanding: "Where did you get this?" as he tore the locket from her neck.

"What is it to you?" she challenged. "Take your hand from me!" The ape-man ignored her command. "Answer me," he snapped. "Tell me who gave it to you. It is mine. Tell me—or I throw you back to the lion."

"Why not?" he queried. "Spies must die if they cannot be caught." "You WERE going to kill me?" she demanded. "I was going to take you to the British. THEY would dispose of you! But Numa can do it as well. Which do you prefer"

Cheese Patrons' Association Endorsed at Kingston Rally

Representative Gathering of Delegates Conduct Business

At the largest and most representative meeting of cheese patrons ever held in Ontario the aims and objects of the Ontario Cheese Patrons Association were enthusiastically endorsed on January the 29th in Kingston.

Three resolutions were submitted to the meeting. These resolutions were as follows: "Resolution recommended: No. 1.—Moved by Mr. MacIntyre, seconded by Mr. Hutchison; That the plan as outlined by the Secretary this morning be accepted and that a request be made to the Honourable Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, that he support the aims and objects of our Association in the way of a grant of $10,000 for the purpose of completing our organization and sending a Commercial Representative overseas not later than April 15th of this year, and that he will arrange credits with the banks to cover funds needed to temporarily finance export shipments."

Instructors to Help

Further, that the Department of Agriculture furnish any assistance they can through their Dairy Instructors and Agricultural Representative to assist in the organization work.

That we should also assure the Minister that we expect to have the organization on a fully self-supporting basis by mid-summer."

"Resolution recommended: No. 2: Moved by Mr. R. H. Mayberry, seconded by Mr. Arthur Moore, That, whereas the extent of territory covered by this Association is great, and

Whereas, we believe that the wish of the majority of the producers of milk for cheese production may be easily thwarted by a small minority;

Be it resolved that the cheese patrons of Ontario proceed to complete their organization by the presentation of our programme to the factoral factories, and if a sufficient majority of the factories are favorable to its adoption, that the programme be incorporated in a scheme under the provisions of the Natural Products Marketing Act, so that it may be made to apply to the whole Province."

Resolution recommended: No. 3. "Moved by H. S. Marjerison, seconded by Mr. A. J. MacDonald: That, having heard a full explanation of the conditions in the dairy industry, at home and abroad, which led the National Dairy Council and the Canadian Dairy Farmers' Federation to make application to the Dominion Marketing Board on January 23rd, 1935, for the approval of "The Dairy Products Marketing Scheme" including the appointment of a "Dairy Products Board", controlled by the producers, for the purpose of equalizing returns among producers of dairy products as far as possible, through a general levy on the industry in order to promote exports of dairy products, this conference of the Ontario Cheese Patrons' Association expresses its full approval of the scheme and instructs the officers of this Association to co-operate in every way possible with the National Dairy Council and the Canadian Dairy Farmers' Federation in pressing the matter to a successful conclusion."

Export Trade

The first resolution was taken up by the Secretary-Treasurer, Mr. H. L. Jon. Referring to export shipments by the Association, Mr. Jon emphatically stated that the existing trade channels in the United Kingdom would not be interferred with, but that the Commercial Representative of the Patrons' Association would solicit the co-operation of the trade there. He further stated that it was estimated that approximately 10% of our cheese would be disposed of through our own representative, the object being to open an alternative marketing channel for the patrons of the Province.

To carry out this plan the Association is getting the assistance of the Ontario Government, but that the lists are being provided so that all export shipments by the Association will be paid for at the cheese board prices at the time of sale.

Shipments will be made weekly for the entire season under this plan and will be drawn from all the principal cheese-producing districts in the Province.

The possibilities of the Domestic Market were also discussed by Mr. Jon. He pointed out that a type of cheese that would mature more quickly than our export type should be developed. Central cold storage was taken up, but as the Secretary-Treasurer stated, our aim should be concentrated on and developed, and if developed wisely, other points would follow. Seventy to eighty percent of our cheese has to be disposed of on the United Kingdom Market. Why, then, should not that market get first consideration?

The Association intends to present their plan to the Dominion Marketing Board under the provisions of the Natural Products Marketing Act in an effort to get the control of the cheese industry into the hands of the cheese producers.

From the report of a recent meeting of the Belleville Cheese Board, the aims of our Association are apparently not understood. Before, however the Association develops their plan, every patron will have the opportunity of hearing it fully discussed at individual factory meetings.

TRAVELLER MEETS WITH RUDE TRAMP

Transient Rewards Generosity With Blows And Curses

A shivering transient who begged for his breakfast in front of the local Post Office on Tuesday morning and was finally treated to an extra heavy meal at a nearby restaurant and given some loose change and a package of cigarettes to speed him on his way, rewarded his benefactor with a heavy blow on the arm and a string of curses because the money given him was not enough.

The Socialist-minded transient who made exception to the "fine clothes" worn by his host following the meal and the small donation of money, fled after he struck the citizen in front of the restaurant on Front Street.

City hall employees learned of the story when the benefactor a responsible commercial traveller who calls frequently in the city received the ingratitude of his early morning guest.

Accosting the traveller on east Bridge Street the tattered transient asked first for a cash donation. "I'm hungry," he whined pathetically. "Fine," responded the business man, "I'm just going to have my own breakfast. Come along."

While the traveller ate a twenty-cent breakfast, his guest boiled a forty cent one. As the meal concluded a full package of cigarettes was slipped into the tattered pocket. The breakfast and cigarettes were accepted without a word.

On Front Street outside the restaurant the traveller prepared to move off. Again he was accosted for some small change by the transient. To help him on his way,

Dipping into a pocket, the commercial man found only a ten cent piece and a few coppers. The dime was offered. Angrily the man accepted it, but the acceptance was marked by a string of abuse centering mainly in the fine clothing worn by the benefactor and his "smallness in offering a man a dime." The transient then ended his abuse by striking the man a heavy blow on the arm and an immediate retreat up Front Street without a word.

Do you think I should have asked a policeman?" later asked the man as he told the story to City hall employees.

Zagreb's Gift to Rome

Rome, Feb. 6.—Although certain inscriptions and dates have been picked out of Etruscan inscriptions by Italian scholars the Etruscan language with its alphabet partly Phoenician and partly Attic has remained a sealed book. Now they have received aid from Professors Ploinjykfor and Dyorjicic of the ancient University of Zagreb, the once flourishing capital of Croatia.

The Croat scholars are not philologists, but experts in manipulating infra-red photographs, and by that means they made a clear photograph of the longest Etruscan text in existence written on papyrus and one of the treasures of the Zagreb museum.

Unless the Belgrade government forbids, the photograph will be sent to Rome. Only 150 words of the text have hitherto been legible, and expert opinions have differed as to their interpretation. The photograph makes the complete text of 1,200 words available for Etruscan scholars, and its final translation will undoubtedly elucidate many obscurities which have so far puzzled them.

It is believed to be a prayer to Jupiter, and to have no bearing on the Egyptian mummy of which it forms part of the wrapping. The mummy, which has been in the museum for over seventy years, is believed to be that of an Egyptian Princess who clearly died very young, and the well-preserved, reddish golden curls and perfect teeth point unmistakably to her youth and beauty.

How much would you pay for a dollar bill?

THIS IS A TRUE STORY:—It started with a half-serious wager, and it teaches a lesson

Two business men were visiting a famous resort. One offered to bet the other that he couldn't sell real dollar bills for 50c apiece. The other accepted the challenge and went to work.

"How do you do," he said to a passing stranger. "Will you give me 50c for this dollar bill?" The stranger paid no attention.

The salesman tried again, and again. But nobody bought—and finally he had to admit that he'd lost his bet.

All of which suggests that people like to know who the seller is before they buy. You can trust the merchants who advertise their products in this newspaper. The advertisements offer useful, dependable information about things you need and want. Read and heed the advertisements carefully and you will reap savings and satisfaction.

MICHIGAN MAN'S BODY FOUND IN CAR TRUNK

NEWS BRIEFS AND ODDITIES

Augusta, Me., Feb. 7 (CP) — Clarence E. Sawyer, diminutive 64-year-old State Representative from Brunswick who favors corporal punishment for wife beaters believes 40 lashes with a whip is a little "harsh."

Smilingly, Sawyer yesterday asked the legislative committee on legal affairs of which he is a member, to continue for one week hearing of his whipping bill so he could offer a new draft which would reduce the punishment to five lashes. The request was granted after the committee ascertained that there was no one present to oppose the existing bill.

New York, Feb. 7 (AP)—Herman Birozy of Brooklyn was told Wednesday he must behave himself for 30 years or go to prison for a similar period.

A 30-year sentence for Birozy on a hold up charge was suspended by County Judge John J. Fitzgerald in Brooklyn and he was placed on probation. The Judge said if he is convicted of a crime in that time he must serve the time.

Birozy said he had reformed.

New York, Feb. 7 (CP)—John W. Citizen can step up and be finger-printed any time he wants to now.

An order of Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine authorizes all precinct stations to make the prints to accommodate persons who wish them made for personal identification.

The other supplements an earlier one permitting the practice at police headquarters—the rush at headquarters led to the station-house method of taking the prints.

The police retain one copy and give the citizen another for himself.

Poplar Bluff, Mo., Feb. 7 (CP)—Even snapping a toy pistol at a person is not right, a circuit court Judge held yesterday.

Oscar Mayberry was on trial for snapping a gun at his neighbor, Tom Sisco, during an argument. Mayberry said it was a toy gun. The jury fined him $100.

Gettisburg, Pa., Feb. 7 (CP) — Mrs. Edgar Herman, Gettysburg's sneezing woman, is believed by her physician to be on the road to recovery.

For 33 days she has been sneezing constantly, except when she sleeps.

Over the week end the frequency of the spasms, attributed to a nervous disorder, increased from one every ten minutes to one every three minutes. But she refused to leave her family and go to a hospital for observation.

Her physician, Dr. Ira Henderson, said last night the "kerchoos" are less frequent again and he believes she is on the road to recovery.

Columbia, S.C., Feb. 7 (CP) — Glittering ice on the refrigeration pipes of the Baptist Hospital looked so good to Woodrow Peterson, 17-year-old hospital attendant, he decided to taste it.

Peterson placed his moist tongue on the "pretty white snow." It froze stiff. His cries attracted Dr. D. F. Adcock and others of the hospital staff to the basement.

The pipe was defrosted, freeing Peterson.

Niagara Falls, N.Y., Feb. 7 — (CP)—Little water was flowing over the American Falls here today as the result of an ice blockade in the Niagara River.

Ice in the river channel between Luna and Goat Islands checked the flow of water over the "bridal veil" yesterday to a mere trickle. The prospect of warmer weather presaged a return to normal flow.

Pilots Save Families From Possible Death

Chicago, Feb. 7.—(CP) —Modest fellows, these airlines pilots, American Airlines yesterday received a letter from W. R. Wood, secretary of the London, Ont., Chamber of Commerce, wanting to thank two unidentified pilots of the line who recently saved two families from possible death by flames.

Wood wrote that one farm home was ablaze near Rodney, Ont., and another near Chatham, Ont., on different nights and that the pilots of the airlines swung their ships low and circled so that the motors' roars awakened the families, enabling them to dash to safety.

The pilots failed to mention the incidents, and the airline doesn't know whom to thank.

DAVID MEISNER GIVEN 15 YEARS FOR KIDNAPPING

Jury Deliberates But One Hour to Find Guilty on All Counts

DECLARES INNOCENCE

Fatures Expressionless as Sentence is Meted Out

By CHARLES NICHOLS

London, Ont., Feb. 7 (CP)—David Meisner, 55, and partially blind, waited today in Middlesex county jail while preparations were made to take him to penitentiary where he will serve 15 years for his part in Canada's first ransom kidnapping.

The former Cincinnati gambler, charged as one of a trio who kidnapped, robbed and held John S. Labatt in a Lake Muskoka hideout last August, was found guilty by an assize court jury late yesterday after it had deliberated for an hour and 13 minutes. He was sentenced almost immediately by Mr. Justice G. F. McFarland. . .

The verdict came one week after the opening day of the trial, a week that saw the crown call 23 witnesses in an effort to show Meisner was one of the abductors of the wealthy London brewery president. The defence called but one witness, Leroy Hall, a Covington, Ky., police detective, who skipped back into the United States late Tuesday before his complete story had been written into the evidence.

Before sentence was passed upon the pallid prisoner, opposing counsel made their submissions to the supreme court judge. Briefly they were:

J. C. M. German, K.C., crown prosecutor: "It would be a great deterrent to any person who intended to perpetrate another such crime in Canada, if the extreme penalty were given."

DOMINION HELPS IN BOOTLEG WAR

U. S. President Roosevelt Praises Assistance of Canada

Washington, Feb. 7 (AP)—President Roosevelt said today the United States Government has gained the upper hand in the war on bootleggers through co-operation of the Canadian Government. Aroused by more than 30 deaths in upper New York State from bootleg liquor, Mr. Roosevelt ordered a special investigation which revealed the supply came from rubbing alcohol and non-freezing ingredients.

He told newspapermen today at a press conference the Treasury had reduced the supply to bootleggers from these two sources. He announced co-operation by the Canadian, British and other Governments in curbing alcohol smuggling. The President also said an agreement had been reached for joint control on the Canadian border, the first of its kind in history. It was described as one of the finest illustrations of friendly co-operation among governments.

Mr. Roosevelt added he was still seeking co-operation from the French Government to clear up what was termed one bad source of alcohol running—from St. Pierre, off the Labrador Coast.

He said France had reached the point of saying it would put requirements on ship clearances from this port if the British would do the same from St. John's, Newfoundland.

An annual $40,000,000 in revenue to the Government was said to be involved in alcohol smuggling.

D. Fairbanks May Reside in London

London, Feb. 7.—Indication that Douglas Fairbanks, sr., intends to establish a permanent residence in London was given yesterday when it was learned the actor is negotiating for the purchase of a mansion in Berkeley Square district.

Word of the negotiations came from the owners of the property, in a fashionable section of the city.

Fairbanks was seen yesterday by one of the lawyers in the divorce suit won by Lord Ashley, after the return of the actor and Lady Ashley from Switzerland and Italy. The divorce, in which Fairbanks was named co-respondent, becomes final May 28.

EAT MORE FISH TO HELP INDUSTRY MEMBERS ADVISE

Suggested Car of Fish be Exchanged For Car of Fresh Meat

ALL CANADA MARKET

Operations of Trawlers Thuroughly Discussed in Debate

OTTAWA, Feb. 7.—(CP)— Eat more fish is the advice handed out to people of Ontario and Quebec by members of parliament from the Maritime Provinces. Impressed with the plight of the Atlantic Coast fisherman, who has little market for his product Maritime members are now turning to the plight of Central Canada Consumers, who do not know the delights of eating fresh fish.

Yesterday, the House referred to its Fisheries Committee a resolution from I. D. MacDougall, Conservative member for Inverness, that the government should cease licensing beam trawlers in order to give small-boat fisherman a chance. The question precipitated general debate on the fishing industry, its ills and their possible remedies.

It was Finlay MacDonald (Cons. Cape Breton South-Victoria), who suggested steps to develop a market for fish in the interior. For every car of fresh meat, which moved from Ontario and Quebec to the Maritime Provinces one or more cars of fresh fish should move back, he urged. To accomplish this, however, people of the inland provinces would have to be made "Fish-Conscious".

FRAMED EVIDENCE OVER NAIL HOLES IS DEFENCE HINT

Dr. Hudson Physician and Amateur Print Man Testifies

RELATIVE VS RELATIVE

Whitehead Says His Relative Whited's Name 'Not Good'

By WILLIAM A. KINNEY

Copyright, 1935
By The Associated Press

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 7— Bruno Richard Hauptmann's defence today pursued a hint of "framed" evidence with an expert who insisted, in the face of photographs and government reports, three incriminating nail holes in the Lindbergh kidnap ladder were not in existence when he examined it.

This witness was Dr. E. M. Hudson, New York physician and amateur fingerprint man.

One Square Nail Hole

He clung to his testimony the famed "rail 16"—a part of the kidnap ladder which the state charges came from Hauptmann's attic and fitted there—had only one square nail hole when he saw it March 13, 1932, 13 days after baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., was kidnapped and slain.

The rail, in evidence, has four nail holes which state experts and police said jibed with nail holes in the hoists of Hauptmann's attic

Relative's Reputation

The defense also sought to weaken the identification of Hauptmann as a man seen lurking near the Lindbergh home before the crime by calling William Whitehead to say the reputation of his relative Millard Whited for veracity was "not good."

The two men do not spell their names the same way. Whited had testified for the state, placing Hauptmann near the crime scene.

William Diehl, another resident of the Sourland Hills, followed. As to Whited's reputation for veracity, he said:

"Taint any good."

George E. Lenz also said "not good" as to Whited's veracity.

Whitehead Once in Jail

The state, in cross-examination of the three Sourland men, brought out that Whitehead had been in jail, that Lenz had trouble with Whited over a lumber bill and that Diehl had signed a statement to the effect he had not discussed Whited's reputation for veracity. Diehl explained he could not read the statement he signed.

Mrs. Augusta Hile, mother-in-law of Gerta Henkel who testified yesterday, said the dead Isador Fisch, accused by the defence as the receiver of the ransom money, borrowed $4,350 from her and never paid it back. Fisch died in Germany. Karl Henkel, Gerta's husband, testified he had known Fisch since 1932 also he had never felt there was anything improper between Hauptmann and his wife, Gerta.

It had been testified Hauptmann frequently drank coffee with Mrs. Henkel at her home in the mornings while his own wife was visiting in Germany.

'Best Friend' Swears

Fisch was a former business partner of Hauptmann's and it was from him, Hauptmann claimed, $14,600 ransom money found in the Hauptmann garage came.

Henry Uhlig, mutual friend of the two men, described by himself as "Fisch's best friend", testified Fisch ran a 'phoney' bakery, was in weak physical condition when he sailed for Europe in December, 1933, and had never loaned him money, when luncheon recess interrupted.

Father and Son Opposed Counsel

London, Feb. 7 (CP Cable) — Sir Henry Curtis Bennett, one of England's most noted legal lights, today was supporting an application for a new public-house license at Croydon. He said he was aware the opposition to granting it was to come from "my young and learned friend, whose name I seem to recognize."

Derek Curtis Bennett — Sir Henry's son—promptly replied to the court: "My learned friend ought to have known what I was going to say, for I learned at his house all there was to learn for and against licensing.

Do not be lured," the son continued, "by the art and attractiveness by which out of his sage experience he can present such applications."

The application was refused.

London, Feb. 7—Probate of the will of the late Albert, King of the Belgians, covering his English estate, showed he left property valued at 10,783 pounds sterling (about $53,900). It was dated March 21, 1932.

In it the King enjoined "my three children to watch over and comfort their mother, so she may have the most agreeable life possible. Her exemplary devotion for 32 years and her great merits entitle her to the gratitude of her children."

He made special provisions for his son, now King Leopold, adding:

"In view of the fact that all charges fall on the head of the state and he has to do all the work and suffers all cares of the dynastic situation, I consider it equitable to secure to my eldest son, Leopold, Duke of Brabant, the benefit of one-quarter in full ownership, by way of an addition to his legal portion."

King Albert was killed when he fell off a rocky cliff in Southern Belgium last year.

30 HOUR WEEK, SICK INSURANCE, ASKED BY LABOR

Delegates to Congress at Ottawa Rregret at Works Delay

RELIEF CAMP WAGE

Ottawa, Feb. 7 (CP)—Assumption by the Dominion government of the full share of old age pension payments, establishment of a national system of sickness and disability insurance, enactment of a 30-hour week and amendments to the British North America Act in order to empower the Dominion government to operate with wider jurisdiction were advocated to the cabinet by the Trades and Labor Congress of Canada. The congress presented to the government the legislative proposals adopted at its last convention.

These differed little from those which have been urged on the government from time to time, although notice was taken of Prime Minister R. B. Bennett's recent utterances and unemployment insurance legislation now before the House of Commons.

CHIEF J. W. LOCKE STARTS FOR TRIAL

Vermilyea's Caretaker, J. S. Swain Accompanies Ontario Chief

Ontario, Cal., Feb. 7—With what he termed "new evidence" to strengthen the prosecution of Harold W. Vermilyea, under arrest in Belleville, Ont., Police Chief J. L. Locke of this city left by train last night for the Ontario city. Locke refused to disclose the nature of his information.

Vermilyea, fruit broker here, is charged with the axe murder of his aged mother, Mrs. Nathaniel Vermilyea, of Belleville. His trial starts Feb. 12.

J. S. Swain, caretaker of the Vermilyea home here, accompanied Chief Locke.

Counsel Predict Trial Verdict

Flemington, N. J., February 7 (AP)—Speculation on what the Hauptmann trial jury will decide has begun among counsel.

Edward J. Reilly, chief defender for Bruno Hauptmann, predicted today: "Acquittal in one hour."

The State Prosecutor, David T. Wilentz, gave the jury no time limit for deliberation but said he was certain of conviction in short order.

Reilly added if the jury did not return a verdict in one hour it would continue study of the evidence for 38 hours before reaching a decision.

The defence attorney based his guess not only on the evidence but on the fact the jury must return a verdict of first degree murder or acquittal.

A recommendation of mercy, carrying life imprisonment, also is a possibility.

CHILD CRUELTY EVIDENCE GIVEN IN GROLEAU CASE

Two Uncles Testify at Murder Trial at Valley field

PARENTS ON TRIAL

No Defence is Offered And Case Goes to Jury

Valleyfield, Que., Feb. 7—(CP)—The fate of Mr. and Mrs. Edouard Groleau, charged with the murder of their six-year-old child, Laura Groleau, by ill-treatment and neglect in their home in St. Antoine Abe, Que., last April, was placed in the hands of the jury here today.

The case came to sudden end when the defence offered no testimony after the crown had brought its case to a close with the evidence of two provincial detectives that Groleau had confessed ill-treating the child.

Groleau and his wife were held criminally responsible at the coroner's inquest last April after neighbors had complained the youngster had been forced out into sub-zero weather in light clothing, whipped and deprived of food and drink.

As the trial resumed before Mr. Justice Joseph Archambault, detectives Ernest Dion and Maurice Robert testified Groleau had shown him the place where the girl had been chained at night. Following conclusion of the crown's case by Ludger Codebecq, defence counsel J. A. Legault said he had no witnesses to call.

Valleyfield, Que., Feb. 7. — How Laura Groleau, whose father and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Edouard Groleau, of St. Antoine Abbe, Que., are on trial for the murder, was refused water when she was thirsty, food when she was hungry, was beaten on the bundled finger tips of both hands and sent out on bitter cold mornings to wash her dress naked and bare-footed in the snow, was told to the jury and Mr. Justice Joseph Archambault here Wednesday on the second day of the trial.

Joseph Groleau, an uncle of the victim, Cecilia Emard, a neighbor of the Groleau's when they resided at Rockburn, Que., and Charles Groleau, another uncle of the six-year-old child, were the witnesses who informed the court of what had taken place. Three of the jurymen had tears in their eyes as the tale was unfolded.

The accused, sitting side by side in the prisoner's dock, were immobile with eyes closed most of the time. Mrs. Groleau, nee Minnie Deschamps, wipes a tear from time to time from the corner of her eye. There were gasps of astonishment from the crowded court room as details were given by witnesses.

Fourteen witnesses were heard yesterday.

"I would not treat my horse like that child was," declared Joseph Groleau, brother of one of the accused, and uncle of the victim.

Lived With Family.

Joseph Groleau said that he had lived with the Edouard Groleau family from Nov., 1933, to Feb., 1934. He had seen the child refused water and food many times. He had witnessed a number of beatings. He said that the child was laid on the seat of a chair, face down, and beaten on the bare skin. He identified the two straps recovered by the police and said they had been used on the child. He also told of the child having to wash her clothing outside naked and bare foot.

"She used to wash the floors some times," declared the witness. "On these occasions she used to drink the dirty water in the pail when her mother was not looking. When she was caught she received a beating. I have seen her sent out on bitter cold mornings to wash the dress she wore. To do this she had to remove the dress in the cold, standing bare foot in the snow and ice. She would wash the dress in cold water and then put it on again before it dried as she had no other dress. The only clothing she wore in the house was a cotton dress. She wore no shoes, there being only one pair of shoes for the eight children."

Witness said that the child was chained to the wall of the house at Rockburn every night for the entire night. She slept on the cold floor without covering. She slept near the stove in which wood was used and the fire frequently died out during the night. Often he had heard the child calling out that she was cold.

Mind Own Business

In answer to a question by the court witness said that he had once spoken to his brother about the ill-treatment inflicted upon the child. He had been told to mind his own business. He was

Canada's First Silver Dollar

OTTAWA, Feb. 7.—(CP)—Dies for printing Canada's first silver dollar will be received from the makers in England the last of March and the new coin will be ready for circulation on May 6, 25th anniversary of the accession of King George which it commemorates. It will bear on the obverse a crowned effigy of His Majesty, head and bust, with the inscription "Georgius V Rex Imperator Anno Regni XXV". On the reverse the design is a canoe laden with pelts, paddled by an Indian and a "voyageur", passing a rocky islet on which are two jack-pines. The word "Canada" is set above with Northern Lights, and below, the word "dollar" appears with the year "1935." Finance Minister E. N. Rhodes conceived the idea of the reverse design which was executed by Emanuel Hahn, R.C.A., Toronto.

M. P. CENSURES UNTIDY FARMERS

Member Believes Inefficient Farmers Deserve No Financial Aid

Ottawa, Feb. 7.—(CP)—A farmer who leaves his implements out all winter is not a farmer at all and does not deserve a loan, Col. Harry Mullins, Conservative member for Marquette, believes. From half a century's experience as farmer, rancher and cattle dealer in Western Canada, Col. Mullins offered a few comments on farmers of today to the House of Commons last night, when extensions of the farm loan scheme were under consideration.

"Go around Western Canada," said Col. Mullins, "drive up to some of these farms. You will find pig pens at the front door because they believe in sociability. You won't find an implement shed. The implements will be scattered all around the place. Those men are not farmers at all. I wouldn't lend them a dollar."

At the same time the veteran cattle man entered a protest against high interest rates. He said he had been on the directorate of three Winnipeg loan companies and had resigned because they were "extracting eight and nine per cent. from the farmers". While he was on the board, however, he refused to pass loans to inefficient farmers. Those same companies, he said, now had a lot of frozen mortgages and it served them right.

RACE TRACK RING WORKING CHARGED

Sweeping Investigation to be Instituted at Texas Tracks

Austin, Texas, Feb. 7.—(AP) — Governor James V. Allred said today he had ordered a sweeping investigation into operations at Texas race tracks of a ring, probably of wide scope, purportedly "fixing" races through use of dope and narcotics.

The investigation was started after eight trainers at Alamo Downs, San Antonio race course, were suspended for alleged improper practices.

The Governor said as far as he knew only one Texas track was involved at the present time but he asserted the inquiry would be pursued into operations at all tracks.

"There is no doubt from the investigation made so far that doping of horses is being done and the gamblers are reaping a big profit from it," the Governor said. "And I have evidence to prove it."

The investigation is being handled by the Texas Rangers.

Governor Allred said he would send a special massage to the Legislature today recommending repeal of the law legalizing parimutuel wagering on horse races. A bill to repeal the law was reported favorably last night by the house criminal jurisprudence committee.

DELIBERATES 65 HOURS

POTTSVILLE, Pa., Feb. 7.—(AP) —Jury that deliberated for 65 hours returned a verdict of voluntary manslaughter today against Joseph J. Bruno, former County Detective and Republican leader charged with murder in the Kelayres election eve shooting outbreak in which five were slain. The verdict provides for six to 12 years imprisonment.

The trial was the outgrowth of an attack on a political parade the night before the United States general election last November in nearby Kelayres.

DEAD MAN'S BODY IN TRUNK OF AUTO FOR 2,000 MILES

Mystery of Disappearance of Robt. Brown of Michigan Solved

CONFESSION ALLEGED

Young Man Said to Have Taken Car After Fatal Row

Sacramento, Calif., Feb. 7.—(AP) —A murder suspect's 2,000 mile motor car ride with the body of his alleged victim was disclosed at a lonely police outpost on the California-Nevada border today and solved it is believed the mysterious disappearance of a Kalamazoo, Mich., trucking contractor and his employee.

Clarence Frechette, 25, driver of the machine, was reported by Captain Joseph Blake of the California State Highway Patrol to have confessed he shot Robert Brown, 25, his employer, at Howell, Mich., January 29, and carried the body in the trunk of the machine for nine days.

With the fleeing suspect when he was taken into custody near Truckee, Calif., were three hitchhikers, a man, a woman and a little boy.

Captain Blake quoted Frechette as saying Brown was killed after the latter had told of intimate relations with Frechette's "girl friend". Brown's purported admission was made nine days ago, Blake quoted Frechette as saying, while the pair were driving from Kalamazoo to Pontiac, Mich.

Says Gun Fired

"I knocked him down," the asserted confession read. "He crawled to the car and reached in a pocket and grabbed that gun. He pointed it at me and I grabbed his hand.

"I don't know whether it was his finger or mine, but the gun fired twice."

"I put him in the trunk and didn't know whether he was dead or alive. I knew if I was caught I'd spend the rest of my life in prison." Blake said Frechette, a former convict once known as "the flying bandit," spent that night in Pontiac and the next in Kalamazoo where he went to a motion picture show. Then began the strange flight.

On Way to China

It was intended to end in China, the purported confession said. But it ended abruptly at midnight because Sheriff Charles W. Struble of Kalamazoo had a hunch Brown had been killed.

The officer's guess was based on a telegram from Nevada and signed "Robert" asking the contractor's father, Roy Brown, to telegraph $50 in care of a Sacramento hotel. The sheriff telegraphed Sacramento police.

The Highway Patrol station near Truckee, through which all automobiles entering California on that road must pass, was immediately notified to be on the lookout for Mrs. Roy Brown's automobile, in which her son had disappeared.

Repairs Made at Hastings County Home

In the first step toward considerable repair work and reconstruction of the building which is expected to be carried out during the coming year, a crew of plasterers is busily engaged at the County Home of Refuge this week recovering large sections of the walls of rooms and corridors where the old plaster had become badly cracked and loosened. The laying of new sections of flooring and repairing of woodwork will follow. So far no report has been received from the Fire Marshal's department following a recent inspection of the building, with respect to added fire escapes and fire fighting equipment.

With the family engaged in household tasks below, overheated stove pipes, which ignited the floor of a double house at 39 and 39 1-3 Canniffton Road shortly before 7.00 o'clock last evening, spread to the walls and ceiling of an upstairs bedroom before being extinguished by members of the local fire department hastily summoned. Mr. Snare heard the crash, but before he could rush out of the house, the motorist had disappeared up the street. The matter is being further investigated by the police.

Icy conditions are attributed the paramount cause for a motor accident at the corner of Pinnacle and Station streets, last evening. Patrick Donnelly, Trenton, had stopped his motor car at the intersection when another automobile driven by Donald Orr, 61 Cannifton Road, and following the Donnelly car, skidded on the slippery roads colliding with the car in front. This was the pair's second trial. At the first a jury could not agree on a verdict after deliberating for seven hours, and the retrial was ordered.

SECOND QUOTA OF WORKERS READY

No Word as to When They Leave For Highway Camps

"Nothing yet", is the repeated answer at the local Unemployment Service of Canada office to daily inquiries regarding the probable date of departure from this city of Belleville's second contingent of workers for the Provincial highway. Although registration for the second force of men has practically been completed and daily calls are being made at the office by those registered, so far no official word has been received from the Toronto department regarding the date they will be called upon. The period of the shift during which time the men work on the rotating system has not been given by the department.

In spite of the fact that a half dozen or so men of the first gang sent to the camps from this city have left the work and hiked hiked back to Belleville, it is claimed by the majority now stationed there, in letters received locally, that work conditions, billeting, and the meals are satisfactory and that the workers are entirely satisfied with their lot. A few chronic "agitators" who were reported to be responsible for some unrest shortly after their arrival at the camps have been given a brief invitation to leave, when conditions did not meet their approval.

RESIDENTS ABLE TO HELP SELVES

Cold Winter of Last Year Provides Real Lesson

One cold winter was all that was needed to teach local residents a few household tips which, if observed in their homes, their plumbing systems and even the family budget should stand future severe temperatures.

Even though the present winter has produced consistently low temperatures, it is not above those of the record breaking registrations of last year, it has been noted this season.

Calls for the services of plumbers and tinsmiths, for the repair of equipment for relief from frozen water pipes have been about one quarter of last year's total.

The number of frost bite cases reported by local doctors and the hospital have been almost negligible. Chapped hands and frost bite have given only a fraction of the work enjoyed last winter.

The local radiator shops report a dearth of frozen radiators during the present season.

Service station attendants report a considerable increase in sales of anti-freeze mixtures over those of other years.

Fewer emergency calls have been made on local dealers for rush orders of coal.

Heavy underwear, old-fashioned heavy blankets and warmer clothing is being purchased by department store reports.

Townships and the county made adequate plans early last fall for snow removal on the travelled roads through the county, following the lesson of drifted and impassable roads last winter.

30 HOUR WEEK, SICK INSURANCE ASKED BY LABOR

Delegates expressed regret that relief works authorized at the last session of parliament had not been more quickly developed. They urged all legislative projects be proceeded with immediately and that, at the present session, a larger sum be appropriated to expand the activities launched last year.

They suggested the government should undertake slum area clearance, finance housing schemes and be more liberal in its allowance towards elimination of grade crossings.

Recalling that the draft convention of the International Labor Organization in 1919 provided for a five-day working week of 40 hours a day, the delegates asked this be enforced on all government undertakings.

Fair Wages in Camps.

In relief camps they requested "a fair and reasonable wage" for those employed "instead of the current economic and slavelabor." This, in their opinion, would give an opportunity for men in those camps to "save sufficient from their earnings to return quickly to their normal surroundings where they would have a chance of again becoming absorbed in the industrial life of the county.

"All work done by the government, whether classed as relief projects or otherwise, should be subject to the provisions and regulations of the Fair Wages Act of 1930", said the labor spokesmen. On unemployment relief, they suggested the Dominion government should accept payment of direct relief to all needy workers as a national responsibility. Public authorities in many centres unable to meet their relief obligations while many unemployed workers were unable to secure relief due to lack of residence qualifications.

Regretting that eight years after its enactment neither Quebec nor New Brunswick had adopted the Old Age Pension Act, the delegates urged all responsibility for the act be shouldered by the government, "the Dominion now pays 75 per cent of the old age pensions."

Five Year Residence.

"Another discriminatory feature of the present legislation," they said, "is the clause demanding five years residence in a province immediately prior to an application being made."

This prevented persons otherwise qualified from enjoying advantages of the legislation, they held.

"This injustice could be eliminated by repeal of this section of the act, but the same purpose would be more satisfactorily achieved if the responsibility for the administration of the act was accepted by the federal government," the delegates declared.

The Congress spokesmen commended the proposals to establish an economic council. He advocated approval of collective bargaining as a necessary basis of development of codes of fair practices in industry, the right of workers to organize free from employers' control, extension of the Industrial Disputes Act to all tariff protected industries, thus "providing the means whereby employees could obtain public inquiry at any time into unfair conditions of labor," and effective enforcement of minimum wage laws to prevent evasions and violations.

N.R.A. Amendment.

Congress representatives requested amendment of the N.R.A. act to ensure full competence of the federal government to enact any social and labor legislation, to permit control over industrial and commercial activities essential to ensuring observance of proper labor standards and eliminate unfair competition between provinces, to empower the Dominion to regulate highway transport, restrict powers of the senate to veto a bill passed at two successive sessions of the House of Commons, and abolish appeals to the privy council.

They resretted the Bank of Canada, while partially nationalized through retention by the government of the government's appointees, had been left so far as ownership was concerned in the hands of private interests. They demanded prohibition if interlocking directorates of banks and insurance companies, vision over loans to brokers. Bank employees should be given the right of association, they said.

Reduction of freight rates and employment by the government of national credit to finance national undertakings were urged strongly.

Delegates advocated increased efforts towards international peace, and "noted with pleasure the action of parliament to ensure strict observance of Remembrance Day".

One of the highlights of the debate was the assertion of Mr. Mac-Dougall, that the Maritime National Fish Company, the American-owned Corporation that controls the three-hundred boat fleet, had a monopoly of the fishing industry. The company, he said, dictated prices to above fishermen, told them where to sell and sometimes made it impossible for them to sell.

"I believe there is a market in Canada sufficient to absorb all the fresh fish that we can catch in the Maritimes," said Mr. MacDonald.

"We must make the people of Upper Canada fish conscious. There ought to be some way of putting before them the desirability of this food.

"Those of us who live in the Maritime Provinces and who have eaten fish caught fresh from the ocean know it is far superior to any choice piece of meat that may be obtained from any animal."

FLEECING FARMERS TO HELP DAIRIES

Charge Levelled at Milk Board by Reeve of Sandwich East

Tecumseh, Ont., Feb. 6—(CP)—Reeve Leon Bertrand of Sandwich East, charged the Ontario Milk Control Board was working only in the interests of farmers or consumers, but in the interests of the dairies, when addressing a Co-operative Commonwealth Federation meeting here.

Mr. Lever said he could furnish affidavits to show small local dairies were being forced by the larger local dairies and the milk board to require producers to sell surplus milk at reduced prices.

"The government admits that milk has become a public utility," he declared, "yet they do they allow the wholesale fleecing of farmers to permit dairies to make the huge profit. Why do they allow those dairies to tell the producers of milk to either bring all their milk to the dairies or none at all."

DAVID MEISNER GIVEN 15 YEARS FOR KIDNAPPING

Pleads Clemency.

Howard Cluff, K.C., for the defence: "Your Lordship, you have seen the accused. You have noticed his health and his blind eye. I urge that as light a sentence as possible be passed under these circumstances."

Mr. Justice McFarland: "The jury has found you (Meisner) guilty of three counts, and I think rightly so. But I want this sentence of 15 years' imprisonment to be a deterrent to crimes of this sort."

Meisner was charged under three separate counts, kidnapping, illegal detention and extortion. On each he was found guilty and sentenced to concurrent prison terms of 15 years. The maximum penalty provided is life imprisonment with lashes.

Meisner let no show of emotion cross his face features when sentence was passed. As he walked for the jury to return its verdict, however, he mopped his face with a white silk handkerchief, then sat back to hear the pronouncement.

The assertion of "not guilty" made by the prisoner when the trial opened Jan. 30, was maintained after the verdict was given.

"It won't be long until they round up the gang that did do the kidnapping and then they'll know I was innocent," he was quoted by his brother, Richard, as saying after he was taken back to his cell. Richard Meisner came to Toronto from Detroit to be with his brother during the closing hours of the trial.

"He's keeping a stiff upper lip," Richard said of his brother.

The sudden disappearance of Leroy Hall and Albert Selters, another Detroiter described by police as a crony for Meisner, cut short the case built up in defence of Meisner.

Hall was called to the witness box by defence counsel, J. W. Bell, K.C., when he opened his case late Tuesday, to testify he had seen Meisner Thanksgiving Day. Mr. Bell, K.C., said he was held doc-chained in a Lake Simcoe hideout by his abductors.

He was being subjected to warm cross-examination by Crown Attorney Norman Newton when court adjourned late in the afternoon.

It is he had escaped from his London hotel with Selters and later it was learned he had crossed the border into the United States at Windsor.

When the case resumed yesterday Mr. Newton's witness was Hall. Bell informed the court his witness had fled. He had not been advised; he had been given no explanation.

"TROUBLED WITH CONSTIPATION" FOR PAST 25 YEARS"

Then ALL-BRAN Brought Welcome Relief

Read this voluntary letter from Mrs. Jane: "I have been troubled with constipation* for the past 25 years. I tried practically every cathartic without success.

"Recently, I determined to give Kellogg's ALL-BRAN a fair trial. Kellogg's ALL-BRAN has not only helped me, but I believe it is an ideal relief for chronic constipation."—Mr. Henry E. Lecour. Address upon request.

*Due to insufficient "bulk" in tissues.

Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides "bulk" to aid elimination. It also furnishes vitamin B and iron.

The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is gentle—and safe for normal individuals. Often more effective than "bulk" in fruits and vegetables, as it does not break down within the body.

Isn't this natural food pleasanter than patent medicines? Just eat two tablespoonfuls daily. Chronic cases, with each meal. If not relieved, see your doctor.

REAR BUMPERS NEEDED ON TRUCKS

During the past few months there have been many reports in the daily papers about motor cars running into the rear ends of trucks with sometimes fatal results but always attended by considerable damage to the motor car. However, what we do not see are the accounts of minor collisions of the same type for the reason that the parties involved settle the matter amicably between themselves and as a result do not report the matter to the authorities.

We have observed that the great majority of trucks, with the exception of gasoline trucks, are not protected at the rear by bumpers with the result that when the heavier vehicle makes a quick stop the motorist behind slides helplessly ahead on the icy road and hits the truck with sufficient force to cause considerable damage to head lights, radiators and fenders. Then follows a lot of heated argument in the middle of the street and the motorist which affords plenty of amusement to spectators but dims an otherwise bright day for the drivers.

We suggest that a lot of this bother could be avoided were the trucks adequately protected by strong bumpers which would absorb most of the shock and which would keep the car far enough away from the truck's superstructure which always does most of the damage. We believe that truck owners would earn the gratitude of the motoring public were they to provide this protection and at the same time save themselves plenty of expense and worry when involved in an accident.

SHOULD KNOW PALESTINE

Those who attended the illustrated lecture of Principal Kent in the Wesleyan Theological College, Kingston, on "With Spade and Bible in Palestine" carried away riches of information and inspiration which will aid them greatly in their study of Semitic civilization, of the Bible and of the relation of our civilization to that of Palestine.

One thought was driven home, that to understand the people of Palestine who gave us the religious impulse and our civilization one must know the geography, the geology, and the ethnic and historical problems of Palestine. The full import of the Scriptures, the words of the Prophets and of the Master Himself cannot be realized without full knowledge of the setting in which that great civilization rose. Further that civilization had a beginning which gave no indication of the greatness it was to reach in the person of the Man of Galilee. Somehow the Hebrews have been made of the vehicle of this development which now dominates a large portion of the world and no doubt will some day be felt throughout the earth in the words of the Hebrew prophets and the words of Jesus. How to explain the crudity of the early beginnings in the light of the supreme development in the great prophets only a few centuries later or even in the midst of some of great lapses is one of the most difficult problems. But it is a fact.

That the history, physiography, ethnology, and archeological discoveries of Palestine ought to be taught as a part of religious education in the public schools does seem clear enough. Otherwise the superstructure of education cannot be what it should. Even in the public schools, how little knowledge of Palestine is imparted? Since the war there may be greater knowledge in regard to that country, but we doubt it. Not to mention there are children who do not know more than half a dozen names of cities of that land, if they know that many.

Those who heard Principal Kent realize the advantage of instruction in regard to Palestine.

KEEPING EXPENDITURES DOWN

If some properly owners who have difficulty in facing their tax bills were to take a look at the list of lands for sale in various municipalities for arrears of taxes they might have just cause for alarm. Pages 165 to 244 inclusive of the February 2nd edition of the Ontario Gazette contain the names of properties for sale because of failure or neglect of the owners to pay the tax levy. It must be explained, however, that such notices of sale may only be published in the first issue of each month for three months in the Gazette. That means of course that if this is a sample offering for sale there can not be much more than four times as many pieces of property offered in a year as each piece of land has to be advertised once a month for three months. How many million pieces of land there are which are not for sale is of course to be considered.

Some of the properties are undoubtedly being allowed to go as a matter of policy as owners may not see any immediate advantage in holding on to them, but in other cases there can be no doubt that some persons are losing homes and having to begin life financially all over again. It is this which should spur spending bodies to use the extremest care to keep down tax rates by keeping down expenditures. Money must not be let go freely when every year may add more to the list of those who have to surrender their fight to hold their property. Mayors and aldermen of cities and towns cannot but face this fact, while many persons are living with full confidence on their ways of life, and with few worries, others are harrassed almost to death to "keep things going."

GREATEST SHOW ON EARTH?

For various reasons the Flemington trial, that began in an atmosphere of dignity, under the direction of an able and conscientious judge, has degenerated to the point of disgrace and scandal. As a climax of cheapening episodes, tending to pervert a solemn matter of life and death into a theatrical entertainment, come the films of the "movie" companies, taken in violation of a pledge given to the judge and spread widely upon the screens like any Hollywood thriller. To their credit, some of the companies have withdrawn their films at the court's request. But the episode remains.—New York Herald Tribune.

LOOK FOR A RISE

The cost of living in the United States is going to turn, if chart-reports prepared by the New Deal forecasters in Washington are correct.

Between now and June 1, it is estimated prices will undergo a steady rise. This, it is stated, will be due chiefly to increased employment, a great volume of business turnover, and the expenditure of $4,000,000,000 on the recovery and relief budget.

A steadily rising price level will be comparatively a great gain in values which will make it easier to pay debts—and reduction of America's tremendous load of debt is essential to recovery.

On the other hand, the cost of living rises faster than wages and salaries, the wage earner and the white collar worker will feel the pinch severely.

Fixing things so that prices rise just fast enough, but not too fast, is apt to be a ticklish job.—Guelph Mercury.

SHOOTING THE RECKLESS DRIVER

In Russia they shoot reckless drivers. The Supreme Court of Crimes has passed such a sentence on a chauffeur, who while driving injured several pedestrians. It is in line with Russian penalty for railroad wrecks, death of the crew. Crimes against machinery are capital offences in the Soviet. Human life is cheap, but machines must not be abused. —San Francisco Chronicle.

THE BUSIEST ROMAN OF THEM ALL

The King of Italy is pressing Mussolini pretty hard. He has just handed Il Duce another portfolio. Reading the Cabinet line-up at sight, here's what we find:

Minister of Foreign Affairs . . . Mussolini
Minister of the Interior . . . Mussolini
Minister of Corporations . . . Mussolini
Minister of Colonies . . . . . Mussolini
Minister of War . . . . . Mussolini
Minister of Navy . . . . . Mussolini
Minister of Aviation . . . . . Mussolini

A TELLING ARGUMENT

The present session of the House of Commons is interesting for the student of politics. Every time a measure is proposed by one side, the other goes at it hammer and tongs, but this year we see the official opposition not only abstaining from attacking but actually seeking to expedite passage of such legislation by abstainin from debate. It is a telling argument, as long as the government fails to implement its programme for social reform by seeking to put it into force by the necessary legislation.—Niagara Falls Review.

ONE THING OR THE OTHER

An aeroplane engine which is almost silent has been invented in the United States. By the use of exhaust gases it has been found possible to muffle the engine without loss of power. No doubt the invention will be widely applied to war planes, so cities in the future may receive no notice whatsoever of the poison gases which may be rained upon them from the skies by a hostile power. Every advance of science makes it clearer that if man does not end war, war will end man.—Hamilton Spectator.

BRITISH RAILWAY EXPANDING

In Canada and the United States there is still talk of curtailing railway expenditures. But in Britain it is different. The most ambitious British railway program since the war is that of the Great Western Railway Company for 1935. It includes 95 new locomotives, 211 passenger coaches, 2,486 freight cars, new bridges and stations repainted, the total cost estimated at about $80,000,000. — St. Thomas Times-Journal.

CHILDHOOD'S LAND

Childhood is like an April field
Encircled by a stream,
With all of springtime there revealed,
Pale buds and bright wings' gleam.
And year by year the stream still grows
More deep, more swift, more wide,
Until at last a river flows,
Strong current, angry tide.

Who has not hungered to regain
That April field once more?
Who has not felt the chance of pain.
In longing for that shore?
There is no swimmer who can breast
Time's waves that swell and rise;
So childhood is a land possessed.
In dreams, not otherwise!

THE WILDERNESS SHALL BLOSSOM like the rose—so runs the prophecy—and recent visitors to Palestine state that a great transformation has taken place there, as the result of the "Back to Palestine" movement, and the efforts of Great Britain (under Mandate) since the war to build up a new and greater prosperity for that land. Travellers tell us that new and modern cities have sprung up as if by magic in Palestine, that there are industries of every type, that miraculous engineering feats have been accomplished there, and that great strides are being made in agriculture and husbandry. Production of the orange orchards in Palestine is particularly startling, six millions barrels of oranges having been shipped during the season of 1934-35. With markets close by, Palestine orange growing should prove very profitable and California will sit up and take notice as Palestine enters the fruit market as an active competitor. Folks who have pictured the Holy Land as bleak and barren and incapable of supporting any kind of a population in comfort can now vision a new Palestine, a land flowing with milk and honey.

SENATOR HUEY LONG, called "The Kingfish of Louisiana" because he practically dominates the politics of the state, and the administration of law and about everything else except Mayor Walmsley of New Orleans, has had his leadership challenged, and like all traditional dictators up to the time of Napoleon and since, proceeds to behead the opposition by seizing the leader and placing him in a dungeon. Senator Long meets emergencies in heroic manner—if one arises within the law. He has [illegible] indicted, if necessary, to coincide with his viewpoint—in this way he always keeps within the law.

THAT MORE INTEREST is not taken in the Boy Scouts by adults is due to the fact that so little is known about the Scouts, as the lads seem to have aloofness from publicity, or perhaps got lost in the shuffle of so many things new, bigger, brighter, and better, presumably, crying for publicity. But of recent awakening of interest in Boy Scouts and the campaign on for new members in preparation for the visit of Lord Baden-Powell, from whose vision came the Boy Scout movement, it may be well to define The Scout Law, which is of a tenfold nature.

1.—A Scout's honor is to be trusted.
2.—A Scout is loyal to the King, his country, his parents, his employers and those under him.
3.—A Scout's duty is to be useful and help others.
4.—A Scout is a friend to all, and a brother to every other Scout.
5.—A Scout is courteous.
6.—A Scout is a friend to animals.
7.—A Scout obeys the orders of his parents, patrol leaders or Scout Master without question.
8.—A Scout smiles and whistles under all difficulties.
9.—A Scout is thrifty.
10.—A Scout is clean in thought, word and deed.

An inspector was examining a class of boys in science and receiving a few answers to his questions. He asked one in a rather facetious manner which drew an aside from a boy in the back row, "Silly ass!"

The inspector, seeing the boy's lips move, called to him encouragingly: "Speak up, my boy, you may be right!"

GIRLS LEARN MORE QUICKLY THAN BOYS DO

After Age Eighteen The Boys Surpass The Girls

By Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph. D., Famous Authority on Health and Psychology

(Copyright, 1935, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Women learn much more quickly than men. Indeed, the learning ability of the female gender is quite remarkable. However, when a subject requires tedious study, a woman's is not likely to be interested. She can do it; she can master it if she wants to, but it does not hold any fascination for her.

Woman especially fancies practical and verbal studies. Any examination rather than method is the course to follow, and which is more or less free from complicated, abstract and technical details.

Girls outscribe their in the lower grades than boys, for the subjects studied conform more closely to the types above noted.

Up to the ages of seventeen and eighteen, the girls grasp new ideas much easier and are much more adaptable and pliable in every way than their brothers. But after eighteen, the boys catch up, and the girls have a difficult time to compete with them in the higher branches of study.

A girl of fourteen, let us say, impresses one as mature as compared to a boy of similar age. Five years later, however, the reverse is the case.

Physical changes and the emotional development that follow them are undoubtedly important factors in the difference in mind development at puberty.

It has been said that although the female mind matures at an early age, it practically ceases to develop after puberty. Such a sweeping cause for this is a dispersal of attention and a shifting and widening of interests —all due to the reproductive urge which sidetracks the feminine mind from persistently pursuing the subjects that have been of interest prior to this time.

At puberty, the boy also becomes interested in the opposite sex, but he can very readily add the new fascination to those which already please him.

When love becomes a factor in a girl's life, it very decidedly undermines her intellectual interests. One might say that the girl substitutes one for the other, while the boy often is spurred on to greater intellectual achievement just because he has fallen in love.

One notices that boys readily and willingly women give up a passion for music, singing, painting, writing, acting or dancing, etc., etc., when they fall in love or marry. But a man finds it next to impossible to do that. When once his ambition follows a certain course, he must needs carry on in the same way if he is to be happy.

Because of the feminine mind, learns so quickly there is naturally a tendency to be careless and shallow in the highest degree of perfection.

What we gain easily we do not value. Some women would rather do many things easily than master one that presents difficulties.

Woman can, of course, overcome any of the tendencies I have outlined if she puts her mind to work. She can master technicalities; and can display concentration and perseverance in short, she can do anything she wishes to do.

Worried, Suicides as Heart Whistles

London, Feb. 7. — A whistling heart is strange to medical science but stronger still to the man who owns one, and Robert Lockyear, a Devonshire saloon-keeper, owned the most since time.

At every beat the heart would whistle, often so loudly people passing by could hear it. It worried Lockyear, and he went to doctors seeking a cure, but none could help him.

He was dead today, a suicide. The inquest revealed he had taken his life rather than go on living with a whistling heart.

HON. D. A. CROLL GIVES RULING

Council Cannot Act When Municipality in Default

Toronto, Feb. 6 (CP)—Without the approval of inspectors appointed for a municipality, councils are powerless to act in financial matters, for a defaulting municipality as long as it remains in default, according to a ruling by Hon. David A. Croll, Ontario Minister of Welfare and Municipal Affairs.

"So long as a municipality is in default its finances are controlled by the supervisance of the Department of Municipal Affairs," Mr. Croll said in a statement last night commenting on the decision of York Township to suspend for February interest payments ordered by the supervisors.

Under a recently adopted re-establishment programme for defaulting municipalities, the Government has ordered them to resume interest payments at a rate not exceeding three per cent. pending re-financing.

York Township decided not to make this payment, contending it might have to pay interest on arrears of interest, which might cost a possible six percent.

Mr. Croll declined to explain the Township's position, but he said the reduction of interest meant for it an immediate saving of $18,000 and a total saving of about $350,000 this year.

"The time has come," he said, "for a test of strength, for a demonstration. That our supervisors are in command of finances in defaulting municipalities."

The Minister added if a municipality is able to re-establish its right to financial independence the Department will relinquish its control over the municipality.

FIRST INFANT IS BAPTIZED IN NEW CHURCH

BOWMANVILLE, — At St. Mark's Church on Sunday last Reverend Syd. Thomas Edward, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Barber was baptized by Rev. Canon W. O. Swayne, The Godfathers were Mr. Jesse Barber and Mr. J. Barlow, grandfather and uncle of the baby, and the Godmother, was Mrs. W. J. Barlow.

Exactly one year ago, February 3rd 1934, Mr. and Mrs. Barber were married in this same church, the ceremony being the first to be performed in the new church. By a strange coincidence their baby was the first to be baptized in the new font which was installed in the church the day before. The font was a gift from the Sunday School, the two senior classes, the Willing Workers Girls' Class and The Argonauts Boys' Class each contributing twenty-five dollars and the main department of the Sunday School the balance. The font is a beautiful piece of workmanship made by the Artificial Stone Coy. of Marmora, and matches the memorial tablet which was made by the same company.

After the church service many of the congregation gathered a few moments admiring the font and congratulating the parents of the present baby boy. The latter is prominent in many societies and is the present Master of Ameliasburg, Prince Edward County.

PLUMBER SWEARS BOARD OF FLOOR WAS NOT MISSING

Truckman Named Main Says Isador Fisch Man in Bank

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 7—A Bronx plumber testified that an attic floor board, which the Rev. Dr. Lindbergh claimed in the Lindbergh kidnap ladder, was not noted by him to be missing when he investigated a leak in August, 1934.

Gustave Miller, the plumber, said he examined the attic at that time for six or seven minutes and could remember no board missing.

The state had produced testimony that after Hauptmann's arrest, police found a board missing from the attic, and that an upright from the kidnap ladder fitted into the meant space fitting with it even the nail holes and the slant of the nails.

This evidence was further supported by a wood expert who said the grain of the ladder upright matched that of a missing attic broom, damaging it, so that he discovered it accidentally, he said.

Miller also supported Hauptmann's story of a leak in the closet, where Hauptmann said he stored a shoe box given to him by Isador Fisch.

Hauptmann had testified that the shoe box became rain-soaked, that he accidentally struck it with a broom, damaging it, so that he discovered it accidentally, he said.

This money—$14,600 in Lindbergh ransom notes—was found in Hauptmann's garage after the arrest. He did not count the money at once he said, and he explained that this was because it was wet and had to be dried.

Miller testified that rain ran down a vent pipe from the roof of the house.

Trooper Frank A. Kelly was called to tell of his methods in examining the interior of the Lindbergh home with Miller. Kelly said a state witness Kelly told of using a black powder method and failing to find identifiable prints.

Wilentz objected that the testimony was repetitious, but Justice Trenchard allowed Fisher, to proceed with his line of questioning.

Fisher, Fisher brought out was on the nursery window ledge, at one side, when Kelly made his examination of the room.

Kelly said the ransom note lay on the ledge not far from the stain.

Q. Do you remember discussing the construction of the ladder with Dr. Hudson? A. I don't recall ever discussing it with Dr. Hudson.

Fisher pointed to the upright which the State says came from the kidnap ladder.

Q. Didn't you discuss the upright particularly? A. Not that I recall.

Wilentz renewed his objections to Fisher's questions as repetitious and irrelevant.

Fisher then demanded if Kelly had noticed that there were only one nail hole in the side of the ladder upright, with the implication it was very significant in his mind.

"That is absolutely not the fact," Kelly responded.

The strategy of the defense Attorney-General Wilentz immediately apparent. The state's wood expert, Arthur Koehler, and others, have testified that there were seven nail holes in the upright and that they fitted precisely with the nail holes on the beams in Hauptmann's attic, where the missing floor board was found.

Fisher was apparently seeking to establish that the nail holes had been deliberately put the nail holes in the ladder to manufacture evidence against Hauptmann.

Kelly was next asked if he knew Isador Fisch had been arrested, if he had told him about it.

Fisher renewed the questions about the ladder investigations.

Q. Did the police make a scale model of the ladder? A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever learn that similar ladders were built and used in South Jersey among Negro fruit pickers? A. No.

Wilentz renewed his protests that the testimony Fisher sought to lead Kelly through had already been given.

Fisher sat down, showing obvious irritation. His mood became biting as he switched the questions again to Kelly's methods.

Wilentz taking the witness, sought to demonstrate where the sheet slats stood on the nursery window ledge. Kelly explained it was in a "recess" at the side.

Wilentz, Fisher and Kelly argued whether the plain protruded into the recess. Fisher produced a newspaper picture of the window, in which Kelly said the ridge appeared to protrude.

Wilentz objected to it as an exhibit, because it "was all marked up."

Kelly could not be sure and suggested that he might "do better," with the original photograph.

Justice Trenchard declined to admit the newspaper picture.

The state's case then rested with Kelly. Fisher demonstrated, did not cross-examine.

Wilentz advised that the picture was not taken for the Hauptmann trial but was a true reproduction of the window on the night of the crime.

Kelly was excused.

Nathan Miller, New York plumber, the next witness, in loud tones told of operating a shop in the Bronx.

Q. Did you work for Mrs. Rauch, Hauptmann's landlady? A. Yes, since 1931.

Q. Were you called to her house in August, 1934? A. Yes.

Q. Was that the house Hauptmann lived in? A. Yes.

Q. When you went there, what did you do? Mrs. Rauch said there was a leak in the plumbing and I come up.

The plumber said he went to the Hauptmann apartment, found the defendant and his wife present and was shown to the closet where there was a leak.

"There are two valves in there, hot and cold," said the witness, identifying a diagram on the broken closet. "There was water coming down the outside of a vent pipe in the attic," the witness explained.

He arose by the witness chair to show how the water descended with a gesture the location of the pipe.

The plumber proved to be a very positive witness. He talked in a resounding, vigorous voice. Lindbergh smiled faintly as he listened.

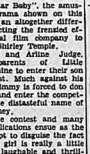
"There is the time of getting there, maybe three, I don't know," he went on.

The plumber, hand on chin, told of climbing from a chair in the closet through the trap door to the attic and locating a leak in the roof around the vent pipe.

Q. Was it a raining that day? A. Right. I had my raincoat on.

Q. saw the water coming down the stack (vent pipe)," Miller went on, "I went in the attic. I always carry my candle so I can see where I'm going."

The witness told of walking over the floor boards of the attic in search of the leak. Rain, he said, was coming in the south window also. (The window is near the vent pipe, the witness explained.)



Q. Had your recollection is that you didn't notice any boards missing in August, 1934? A. Yes.

Q. Did you see any boards in the Rauch cellar? A. Yes, in 1931. I helped put them there.

Q. What kind of boards did you put in there? A. They looked like about 5 or 5 1-2 inches wide. There were two leaning against the wall.

Miller said Mrs. Rauch was the only person who had a key to the cellar but his remark was stricken from the record at the request of the Attorney-General.

AT THE BELLE
"The Little Minister"
Greatest Role for Katharine Hepburn

Katharine Hepburn brings to the screen her most important, and greatest, role in Sir James M. Barrie's "The Little Minister", her role being that of "Babbie", a gypsy waif, big but exquisitely romantic gypsy girl of the novel and play.

Miss Hepburn's brilliant performance in her first film role that of Sidney in Bill of Divorcement with John Barrymore, immediately established her as a star of the very first rank. It was followed by triumphs in "Christopher Strong", "Morning Glory", "Little Women" and "Spitfire."

The cinematic interpretation of Miss Hepburn includes to date but five pictures, but in all of them she has given distinguished performances. It was for her work in "Morning Glory" that she was awarded the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences medal for the best feminine performance of 1933. For her Jo in "Little Women" she has received the medal of the People's Academy of New Movie Magazine for the best performance in 1933 by an actress.

Thrice in a week, recently, Katharine Hepburn was again signally honored. Each tribute was from persons who have known her, have established herself in the hearts of motion picture lovers, everywhere.

Miss Hepburn, who is rated as one of the ten most interesting personalities in the globe.

Sir James M. Barrie called her the ideal selection for the character in his play "The Little Minister" on the Belle Screen Tonight and Friday, matinee and evening.

And at the International Exposition held in Venice, she was awarded the Gold Medal to the actress giving the supreme dramatic performance on the screen. She won for her work in "Little Woman".

In "The Little Minister" the star's vivid young genius extends itself in a revel of appealing humor and pathos.

Featured in the support of Miss Hepburn are John Beal in the title role; and Alan Hale as his tormentor, Micah Dow, village miser and drunkard. Other colorful roles are by Beryl Mercer as the little clergyman's mother; Donald Crisp as Dr. McQueen; Frank Conroy as Lord Rintoul, Lucile Browne as Lumsden Hare as Lang Thamnas, perrenter of the village Kirk; Andy Clyde as Weaver Webster; Billy Watson as Micah Dow; Mary Doreas as Jean Cargill and Lucy Beaumont as Lord Rintoul's sister; Reginald Denny as Capt. Halliwell Lorraine Bruce as Nanny Bersford as John Sprue, Barlowe Borlan as Sneedy and E. E. Clive as the shoemaker.

There is a quaint rare beauty to "The Little Minister" that is somewhat akin to a trip through storied Scotland, and is perhaps the first great picture of 1935. By all means you must see "The Little Minister" at the Belle tonight, or on Friday, matinee or evening.

AT THE CAPITOL
"Menace"
Exciting, Sinister Mystery Drama

A murder mystery that creates a sinister foreboding of doom and builds suspense with chilling effect is the screen fare at the Capitol Theatre today. An excellent cast makes the most of its many opportunities in this new murder-mystery yarn, which finds Gregory Ratoff, Rogers as Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh, John Lodge, Henry Mollison and Lumsden Hare in the leads.

Directed by Ralph Murphy, "Menace" tells the unusual story of three people, two men of the world and a beautiful woman, who become involved in the unfortunate circumstance a recently committed murder, resulting in the death of a well known engineer.

Suspicion falls on each of the suspicion, the dead man's brother, tortured by doubts and suspicions, becomes insane and kills the three people he believes caused his brother's death.

The identity of the avowed killer is skillfully kept secret, and the three people, living in fear of the insane sudden and horrible death, await the inevitable. Each in turn begins to carry out his plan of revenge.

Gripping Climax

When this terrifying moment arrives, the tension mounts and several guests are living in a secluded house, miles away from the nearest habitation. Then the storm breaks in match wits with a madman, following a thrilling pursuit through the snow-covered countryside.

One of the party, makes "Menace" one of the new season's most exciting and interesting pictures.

"Million Dollar Baby"

"Million Dollar Baby", the amusing comedy drama shown on this week's Paramount News, includes different story depicting the frenzied efforts of a rich man's daughter to find another Shirley Temple.

Ray Walker and Arline Judge, both of Paramount fame, Lilian Jimmy, determine to enter their son in a beauty contest. Much against his wishes, little Jimmy is forced to don a wedding and enter the competition under the distasteful name of Patricia Sweeney.

The rest of the contest and many amusing complications ensue as the parents attempt to disguise the fact that the little girl is really a little boy. Further laughable and thrilling situations develop when gangsters learn that the child has been insured for a million dollars and decide to kidnap him.

Members of an excellent supporting cast include George E. Stone, Jeanette Loff, Willard Robertson, Ralf Harolde, Paul Porcasi, Wilbur Mack an, the Connolly Twins.

Capitol News showing current world events and a tuneful and colorful Merrie Melodie "Mr. and Mrs. Is the Name", will be shown at each performance.

Last complete show at 8.45.

Major Shepard States Wife Had Mental Disorder

Topeka, Kas. Feb. 7.—(AP)—The defence neared the end of its case in the federal court murder trial of Major Charles A. Shepard today, still contesting the second wife of the retired army medical officer suffered from a mental disorder and probably committed suicide.

Attorneys agree the one time resident of Belleville, Ont., accused by the government of poisoning Mrs. Shepard at Fort Riley, Kas., 2 1-2 years ago, said they expected to exhaust their list of witnesses within a few hours.

At the same time federal prosecutors announced they would have 15 rebuttal witnesses' whose testimony would be brief.

Miss Grace Brandon, one-time assistant of the officer, and chief government witness, still is here but has not been in the courtroom for three days. The government contends the motive for the alleged crime was the desire to marry Miss Brandon. Mrs Brandon, 28-year-old Brooks-field, Tex., stenographer.

Following up the testimony of Dr. M. A. St. Peter, former medical corps Major, that Mrs. Shepard "had a definitely fixed idea of suicide," the defense yesterday introduced Major Albert J. Stricker, U.S.A. retired, who said she was suffering from a mental disorder and psychosis.

He said the disease was induced by the "excessive use of liquor over a long period of time."

INDUSTRIAL SHARES

Toronto, Feb. 7 (CP)—The industrial share section of Toronto Stock Exchange was stepped up today to a more cheerful outlook but trade was still far from satisfactory to brokers. Gains were confined to a small dribble and gains, which held the edge on losses during the forenoon, were mainly in narrow fractions.

Ford of Canada came out in better volume and the price was up ¾ this afternoon. Hiram Walker, Canada Malting, Steel of Canada and Wabasso also held higher and other secondary golds and the high price issues held firm.

Gunnar Gold, Bobjo and McWatters were heavy leaders in the up-side and in the Base Metal and Silver groups higher prices were put on Noranda, Falconbridge, Sherritt and Base Metals Corporation.

Flemington, N. J. Feb. 7—A defence expert for Bruno Richard Hauptmann today insisted that incriminating nail holes appearing in the Lindbergh kidnap ladder did not appear when he examined the ladder less than a month after the crime.

Dr. R. M. Hudson testified there was only one square nail hole in a rail of the ladder which the State charges came from Hauptmann's attic. He declared that not very government reports on the ladder would cause him to change his testimony on the point.

Police and state experts testified the four nail holes in the uprights, which is in evidence, jibed with nail holes in joists of Hauptmann's attic.

Attorney General David T. Wilentz showed him a photograph and asked:

"Assuming this picture were taken in March, 1933, would you agree that possibly you were mistaken in your testimony?"

"Well, under your premise I would say yes."

Shortly later:

Says "Not Mistaken"

"If this ladder were examined by persons other than the state police on or New Jersey in March, April and May, 1932, and reports were filed during those months showing three rather nail holes would that induce you to believe that possibly you were mistaken."

"No, sir, that wouldn't."

"If the United States government report showed in 1932 that there were four nail holes, three more nail holes, would that lead you to change your mind?"

"No, sir, it would not."

The ladder rail was considered one of the state's strongest links in the circumstances by which it seeks to hold Hauptmann to the electric chair for the kidnapping and murder of Baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

The nail hole Hudson saw was in the top or third section of the ladder. The attorney general showed him the middle section and pointed out two nail holes.

Q. Did you see those nail holes? A. I don't remember.

Questioned On Nail Holes.

Q. Will you say that those holes were not there when you examined the ladder? A. To my knowledge they were not there.

Wilentz showed him another nail hole. Sergeant Hoffman's knowledge and belief that was not there?

Q. So your opinion includes photographs for six months or a year? A. Yes.

Q. If the ladder got wet, the finger prints would be destroyed? A. From my own knowledge, yes.

Wilentz sought to bring out the atmospheric conditions on the foggy nap night might have wet the ladder and destroyed the prints. Dr. Hudson said that would only make the ladder damp and he meant "soaking" wet when he spoke of wet.

Dr. Hudson estimated of "more than 500 fingerprints" on the ladder were attacked by Wilentz.

Q. Did you count them? A. I said about 500.

Would Expect Prints.

Q.- But if there were 500 or 5,000 fingerprints on that ladder when you processed it, would you say any of them were there on March 17 A. I would say some were there.

Hudson said he would get the prints of everyone who handled the ladder and eliminate all of their prints.

Q. Don't you know Trooper Kelly handled that ladder and your process never brought out his fingerprints? A. No, I think he always wore gloves handling the ladder.

Question of Gloves

Q. Don't you know Sgt. Kuhler another state police fingerprint officer handled that ladder and your process never developed his prints?

A. I think he wore gloves.

Q. And don't you know Col. Lindbergh handled that ladder without gloves and your process never brought out his prints?

A. I didn't know that.

Q. Don't you know that Kelly, Kuhler and Col. Lindbergh handled that ladder without gloves?

A. I only knew Kelly and Kuhler handled it.

Wilentz went back to the nail holes.

Q. Pick out the nail hole you found in the ladder?

Picks Nail Hole

A. I'm sure that's it (the witness made a mark by a nail hole on the ladder).

Q. If that's the hole then that's the board?

A. Yes.

Q. And if that board matches the board in Hauptmann's attic you would say that it came from there?

A. Yes.

Pegs on re-direct examination, asked why Dr. Hudson remembered only one nail hole.

The doctor explained his examination led him to believe the square nail hole was a knothole in the board into a cleat. He believed, he said, the wood came from a crate.

DEAD MAN'S BODY IN TRUNK OF AUTO

Lifted Lid Reveals Body

While Frechette underwent the routine border inspection, Highway Patrolman Ernest Hall lifted the lid on the trunk.

He stared down into the eyes of young Brown, shot twice through the head. Carson snapped the trunk shut.

Walking back into the Patrol station he covered Frechette with a revolver. The truck driver surrendered without resistance and within two hours Captain Blake announced he had confessed.

CHILD CRUELTY EVIDENCE GIVEN IN GROLEAU CASE

afraid of his sister-in-law, he informed the police and therefore had done nothing for the child. He stated that he had not been present outside to think of reporting the matter to the authorities, because "I knew no better."

"I cannot understand your attitude," was the remark of Mr. Justice Archambault, while three jurymen furtively wiped tears from their eyes.

Witness stated he had seen Mrs. Groleau on some occasions take the child's hands and bundle the fingers together and then beat the tips with a square stick. On such occasions she struck seven or eight blows on each hand and his brother who was present never objected or interfered.

When at first went to live there," said witness, "Laura was normal at all times. I could see that at the end she was thin and weak."

On one occasion the child drank coal oil. It had been decided by the parents that Laura and her self and to hide all food and water "just to see what she would do." The coal oil was in a can that had been left out. In the morning it was found that the child was covered with coal oil from head to foot. Laura's drunk mother he could not say how much. There were spots on the child's head where her hair was missing and he had seen the child's hair pulled often. Her fingernails, he said, were awful, though chained to the wall was beaten if she moved. He said that Mrs. Groleau told the child to tell other children to play with Laura when they came to the house while the others slept in beds or on straw mattresses.

Witness Says Children Suffer

Cross examined by J. A. Legault, K.C., witness said he had seen the most of these things in the evening. There were very few visitors to the house and he had to be invited had refused to come. He admitted that the other children were beaten now and then. He also admitted that they were always enough food in the house for the entire family.

Dr. Leopold Savage, of Ste. Philomene, who is also coroner for the district of Beauharnois, was the medical evidence for the Crown when he stated that the child seemed to have suffered ill-treatment and that this had contributed to her death by pneumonia.

When he saw the body in company with Dr. Romeric Pontaine, provincial medico-legal expert Dr. Savage said that it was covered with scars and bruises. They had lessened the child's power of resistance.

"I also noted that there was a lack of water in the tissues of the body," said Dr. Savage. "This would seem to indicate that the child had suffered water to drink. There was a wound at the back of the left leg where the leg joined the foot. This was a circular wound and was so deep that the tendon was bared. The wound was recent and was what could be called "a continuous wound."

Loss Resistance Power

Shown the chain which had been produced in the Crown, Dr. Savage said that such a chain could easily have inflicted such a wound if worn often. He also pointed out that if the child were tied up at night and was in such a weakened state she could not sleep well her power of resistance would be lessened much more rapidly than if she were tied up for only a short period during the day.

The doctor also claimed that cold and exposure could bring on pneumonia. Donning wet clothing after standing barefoot and naked in the cold would bring on pneumonia quickly. Witness told of his visit as coroner in connection with the case.

After the clerk of the court and prothonotary for the district J. R. Legault had produced ten exhibits for the Crown in his case since the preliminary enquete and consisting of toe traps, chains, a padlock with its key, nails and a child's beret, Detective Ernest Dion of the Provincial Police, who investigated the case, told his story to the court.

The detective said that he had been assigned to the case and he explained where and how each article mentioned in connection with the case had been found. As to the padlock he declared that it had been found beneath a stone in a pile seventy-five feet away from the Groleau home. He said the chief shown him where to find the key and its key.

'Combines' Defeat Petes 11-9 Staging Brilliant Offensive in Third Period and Overtime

Roy Covert Shining Light in Game Packed With Thrills

GOOD ATTENDANCE

Petes Unable to Cope With Sustained Local Offensive

Facing a two-goal deficit at the end of the second period which increased to three at the opening of the third, the Belleville "Combines" staged one of the most brilliant offences and sustained attacks ever witnessed in this city to down the Peterboro intermediates by the score of 11 to 9 in ten minutes' overtime by a regular "day" of it. All at the local arena last night. The result of this game leaves Combines and Peterboro a tie for first place with Belleville in the third play-off round and it is expected a play-off between the two top-notchers will follow.

Two or three players flashed into the limelight as the "Combines" swept home to a third period tie and continue to hold their advantage and out-play the Petes in the overtime. Roy Covert, their ace scoring centre man, the local Thomas managed crew won the admiration of some 800 fans who packed their return to form after facing a deficit that seemed impossible. Covert literally stole the show as he repeatedly dug himself through the Peterboro defence and raced in to either score or test the opposing goalie. Covert figured in all of the locals' seven goals as he flashed the red light behind him from the three perfect passes that resulted in subsequent goals. Though getting guarding the twine for the locals, he rose to dizzy heights in the brilliant saves, especially in the last period and the overtime stanza. Repeatedly Covert stood the Petes in turn in one of the most brilliant efforts seen by any local goalie in quite some time. Cy Barriage, drafted by Skipper Thomas from the junior ranks, took his share of the limelight honors as he crowded goal with the best of the Petes while Callaghine and not only held him off the scoring sheet, but Barriage himself rifled the rubber into the Peterboro twine exactly three times, to cover shadow the star Lifnock City ace going both ways. Elsley and York set up a hefty share for the locals with Jimmie Ehler carrying the load with a fine exhibition of stick and playing his best game of the season. His blocking and rushing was a thing of the highest order. Powers and Carl Morgan teamed well with Covert at the shiny and shifty ex-Deseronto youth literally stole the limelight of the latter.

Ellis Leads Petes.

Jimmie Ellis led the Petes on the offensive being ably assisted by Archie Weir and Bill Morgan, with Harry Cadd standing out as the star of the night for the Wright-managed Petes. Cadd's offensive play netted him four scoring points, two pretty goals and many thrills. The Petes battled back gamely, but the superior local skating demonstrated by the locals took its toll saw the visitors collapse from exhaustion after the overtime, namely the position and the leadership of the local intermediate crew.

The game had gone exactly four seasons when Roy Covert, playing in Power's pass, even before some of the spectators had seated themselves in their seats. It was one of the speediest scored goals ever notched locally. Covert took possession of the rubber at the face-off, raced into the Peterboro zone, slid a shot to shot that Foley cleared to the right. Powers slashed in the rubber back to Covert and the puck lodged in the Petes' net after Covert shot. Archie Weir knotted the count when he sunk Callidine's pass seven minutes later only to have Jim Ehler put the "Combines" ahead 2 to 1 when he scored on C. Morgan's pass. Both teams were travelling at top speed, no let-up being experienced in the one of the fiercest fought battles of the season. The Petes went on a scoring rampage in the second frame, however, and out-scored the locals five to two making the count 6-4 in favor of the Petes as that hectic third frame opened. The Petes moved one goal further ahead as the last stanza opened as Cadd sank the rubber. It was following this that the local aggregation gave the fans a thrill at a lifetime with their entered attack that resulted in Belleville scoring five goals in the Petes' three and the sixty minute mark found the teams knotted nine all. One of the prettiest goals ever scored in the Belleville arena came in this stanza when Roy Covert stickhandled his way through the entire Peterboro team to score the goal that elevated the locals to within one goal of tying the score. Covert's effort on this play was roundly applauded, he displaying beautiful stick-handling and clever shooting throughout. In the overtime Jimmie McGuire showed the locals of victory when he scored York's pass at the five minute mark. Alex Weir added surely to the victory when he lifted home Carl Morgan's pass four minutes later. The Petes battled in vain to cut down the margin.

Crooning Clouter From Cork Lands In N. Y. Today

(By Sam Robertson, Canadian Press Staff Writer)

New York, Feb. 7 (CP)—After many weeks of advance notices—of ballyhoo if you will—Jack Doyle, the crooning cloulter from Cork, arrives in New York this afternoon. A busy schedule of fights has been arranged for him but that does not mean the depths of his ability will be a public secret at an early date.

The latest Irish hope among the heavyweights is being conducted on his American tour by Walter Friedman, Friedman may be remembered as the helmsman of Primo Carnera's first United States appearance around the kerosene-lamp circuit, when the Italian, who is now the champion, was a budding steam roller and over scads of opponents of little ability.

It cannot be known yet what Doyle is going to build up to the big time process but the greybeards say history repeats itself and Primo's parade through the puddles overs was profitable.

Jack Dempsey will have a hand in the launching of Doyle. The fighter will be wined and dined soon after his debarkation from the S.S. Washington at the holty toity new bar operated by the ex-champ on the street from the Madison Square Gardens also known as the haunted house to Tex Rickard fans.

The fight-writers, who always have to write hundreds on such occasions have been invited to "come and bring your thirst and your typewriter—it's all free." As a result many columns will be written about Doyle's sculptured Irish head, Irish face, broad brogue and, if he has one, "Bunker Maschree" about his vocal ability.

It is all very grand advertising but will get Doyle away on the right foot, if anything will.

After the fanfare has better is unrolled in Boston, he will swing to the west with each stop bringing him closer to Hollywood. That is itself is almost a complete confession he will not meet any serious competition for months to come. For Doyle is reported already signed to a movie contract. A heavyweight fighter is no box office magnet at the theatre the bouts or the boxing arena.

TRIPLE HEADER IN TOWN LOOP DRAWING CARD

Wooler Goes to Top of League With Win Over Workers

2 GAMES TIED

Practically All Teams Saw Action to Get Schedule Over

Trenton Feb. 7—(Special)—The leadership of the Trenton and District Hockey League seems to change every hockey night. Wooler are now sitting on the top runs after defeating the Co-operative Workers in a one sided game by an 8-2 score. The first triple-header was staged Tuesday night at the arena with the other two games ending with the score tied 3-all. Smithfield and Frankford battled sixty minutes to a draw and the Trent Cottons battled seventy minutes with the Dominport Tigers.

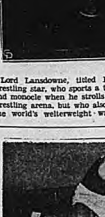
Roy Scott led Wooler with four goals. G. Ruttan, C. Ruttan, Carm. Ruttan and Teale counted the others. Ruttan and Carm. Ruttan make as fine a defence as any team in the league can boast. McColl and Steenburg also worked well on the forward line. George Barr, Curry and "Chief" Lowes starred on defence for the Workers. The Workers lacked combination and game spirit which has counted against them in their four defeats since entering the league.

Wooler — goal, Bryant, defence, Wm Ruttan and Carm Ruttan; centre, Coll, wings, Steenburg and G. Ruttan, subs, Scott, Ruttan, Redcliffe, Putnam, Scriven, Teale.

Co-operative Workers—goal Shorten, defence, Workers and Ada, centre, Curry, wings Weese and Mitts, subs, Doughlin, White, Crowter, Bell, B. Benham, J. Benham, Longdon.

Referee—Bill Miller.

Smithfield 3 — Frankford 3



After trailing the Smithfield sextette 2-1 in the game opening the finish, Frankf'd, led by Johnson of Wallbridge, a new man, evened the count as the bell sounded the time limit. Johnson vounted the final counter for Frankf'd with only ten seconds to go. The team managers did not agree to play overtime so each took a point.

Lemoire, Corbett and Davis looked the best on the line for Smithfield with Dimp" cKinnon, former Belleville C. O. H. A. net minder playing a stellar game. For Frankford, Gordon, Sendaret, McLeod and Johnson looked the best. Frankford were without the services of Finnegan who was mid-ice. Lemoire scored the other goal for Frankford. Corbett, Davis and Hansen

HIKES AT 110

Dr. Charlotte De Goliers Davenport, who was born Countess Charlotte Pourtoff 110 years ago—specifically December 4, 1824—is said here enjoying a few puffs on a cigarette after completing a hitch-hiking adventure in zero weather from Philadelphia to New York. After lighting a cigarette, Dr. Davenport commented that "people are money and pleasure mad in dull, conventional ways. They neglect their wives, children and bodies and also the prime principle of well-being—moderation."

LEAFS HOPE SLUMP OVER

Meet Boston Bruins in Toronto With Kid Line Intact

(By the Canadian Press)

Boston Bruins are going to discover tonight if and how deep Toronto's Maple Leafs are in a slump. The rest of the National Hockey League, while pretty busy on its own account, will watch the Boston experiment with great interest because Toronto has lost its last three games.

If the Bruins fail to accomplish what the Irry Boit Line did last night, they will be back on left wing and the Kid" line will be intact for the first time in several games, made the trip with Coach Conacher, who has found goal-getting most difficult with Frankie Boucher and Joe Primeau alongside him.

New York Rangers hope to make it four-in-a-row tonight before a defeat at the expense of the Americans, and Chicago Black Hawks, in the midst of a seven-game winning streak, move into St. Louis for a Tuesday night date.

Gradually slipping farther behind the third-place Montreal and out of playoff contention, Detroit Red Wings will try to find some more better real Montreal, where they face Canadiens. From a playoff point of view they are more interested than any other engagement on the night. Canadiens have not yet shaken off the Americans.

George Earnshaw Pulls Fast One On 'Daffy' Dean

HOT SPRINGS, Ark., Feb. 7. — (AP)—This one on Paul Dean is going the rounds of baseball.

Daffy and his bride were dining in a restaurant when a fellow individual approached shyly.

"Are you Dazzy Vance's kid brother?" he asked.

Paul admitted his identity, and the stranger asked for his autograph. Daffy obliged, commenting:

"You look big and husky yourself. Did you ever play baseball?"

"Yes, I have also played a little; I like the game."

"What position do you play best?"

"Oh, I enjoy pitching very much. I used to be pretty good at it too."

By this time, Paul, who entered the major leagues only last year, began to sense something.

"Say," he declared abruptly, "what is your name, anyway?"

"George Earnshaw", the big fellow replied modestly.

SIX TIES FOR SECOND

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 7.—(CP)—Buffalo Bisons shared the second place in the International Hockey League ladder with London Tecumsehs here after defeating the latter-place Windsor Bulldogs 2-1 in overtime.

The net shot by Johnny Newman from outside the defence last night gave the "Combines" staged the most hectic rally seen locally in years to knot the count in the third period and then went on, not only to win, but completely outplay the Petes in the ten minutes overtime period.

Local hockey fans had heard much of the prowess of Roy Covert, and last night it remained to Roy Covert, a product of some twenty summers, a local lad of some twenty summers to prove that he can shadow the Lifnock City ace and completely outplay him all evening. Starring in the goal for honors, "Derby" Jeffrey staged his greatest come-back in the months. "Derby" retired from the pastime some three seasons ago but he came back on the night to star for the locals with his many miraculous saves, while Jimmie Ehler showed the lads the way home defensively. Roy Covert was the shining light of the forwards with Powers and Barriage following in their footsteps. "Derby" fooled the boys and also the Petes with his shifty plays. York also starred into the fracas with a vengeance. "Twas a sweet game.

The Campbellford team was not officially represented at last night's game when the Peterboro boys dropped them into a tie with the Marconis for first place. Local Manager Eddie Wright announced that he would get in touch with the Marconis today and endeavor to toss in action the group of youngsters failing to accomplish this suggestion, however the Petes and the locals will battle it out for the group championship here on Friday evening. In the meantime the locals have shown their hockey ability and are quite willing to do it and to "show do it". Incidentally fans missing last night's tussle missed the greatest sport thrill staged locally in years.

In order to rapidly advance the city-wrestling in the local city hockey league president Harry Rollins called the managers of the two leading teams, Cadd and Alemite, together and tossed a coin to determine

To my Valentine

You may combine the qualities of Samson and Clark Gable . . .

You might be able to provide silk, satins and rich sables;

But just the same a man like you can't satisfy my craving.

It's high time someone told you that..

You can't get by without shaving

Gillette "Blue Blade" Shaves

Comic Valentines sometimes hurt your feelings, but many of them teach important lessons. Here's one for every man who is careless about shaving.

If you have one who neglects his beard—appears in public with stubble on his face—why not do him a real favor by mailing him this Valentine? It might do a lot of good. For apparently some people still don't realize that whiskers are repulsive—make a man look untidy, ill-kept and often lose him the respect of others.

Today there is no excuse for neglect. Any man with a normal skin can shave daily or twice daily in perfect comfort if he uses the Gillette "Blue Blade."

This blade is especially processed for quick, easy strokes on sensitive faces. Its edges are smooth—scientifically ground, honed and stropped by methods not to be compared with those used by any other manufacturer.

Try the Gillette "Blue Blade" on our money-back guarantee of complete satisfaction.

The great Mr. Willie Callaghine has come from the scoring sheet last night as the Belleville intermediates humbled Eddie Wright's Petes in a self-styled group champions in a fast overtime tussle at the local arena. There may have been the proverbial "Morning After" in the air for a couple of hours in the days past, but last night's third period rally on the part of the "Combines" was a little more than sensational. The Petes may have been the occasion and gave their home town fans a last minute thrill and victory but after last night's game they surely know what it means to have the better team come from behind and win. Facing a reverse lead the "Combines" staged the most hectic rally seen locally in years to knot the count in the third period and then went on, not only to win, but completely outplay the Petes in the ten minutes overtime period.

Local hockey fans had heard much of the prowess of Roy Covert, and last night it remained to Roy Covert, a product of some twenty summers, a local lad of some twenty summers to prove that he can shadow the Lifnock City ace and completely outplay him all evening. In order to rapidly advance the city-wrestling in the local city hockey league president Harry Rollins called the managers of the two leading teams, Cadd and Alemite, together and tossed a coin to determine which club should be awarded first position with the result that Stan Hagerman-Cripps won the flip and will meet the B.R.A.C. in the semi-finals as the Grills' Garage crew take on Ivan Loyd's Texaco squad at the same time. After considerable discussion it was decided that double-headers would be played in the semi-final series with single games played in the finals for the championship. Incidentally the semi-finals will be at stake and awarded to the winners while the Dr. Roberts trophy will be competed for in the post-season affair. The league executive decided that the Scout End team alone would be allowed to materially strengthen their squad in order to elevate their strength to a par with the other three clubs. The executive felt that with four strong teams in the playdowns the fans would be afforded a better series and more excitement might prevail. The South Ends and the scouts are now tied, Grills and reserved the right to name their other entry at a later date.

Ralph Morden, coach of the "T" intermediate basketball team, announced today that he had completed arrangements for the final Camp Borden "Flyers" to Belleville for an exhibition game on Feb. 16. The "Flyers" are reputed to be one of the finest squads of hoopsters in Northern Ontario and should afford the fans a real opportunity to see a high class team in action. We don't mean to infer that the local "Y" aggregation is any inferior outfit as they have established themselves as a powerful team already this season. No R.O.B.A. games for local teams have been scheduled for this week, intermediate games serving the only active hoopsters in Belleville this week.

Only one team gained ground in the local Owl League the other night, two tie games being played. Ivan Loyd's Texaco trimmed the Ont. John Club 3 to 1 while the Percival Store and the Ont. Hydro's were usual draw as did Loblaw's and the G. W. Telegraph, Peterboro.

Complexion Suffers Under A 'Stop and Go' Regimen

(The Beauty Box)

Irene Dunn

The glowing beauty of her skin is kept so by constant care.

By HELEN FOLLETT

What does the looking glass say? Is the reflection therein to your liking? Is the complexion soft and smooth, or have brisk winds ruffled its surface, made it amalgamable to powder and makeup?

Reconditioning should go on all the time, at all seasons. In the summer season the sun burns it with violent kisses. In the winter time Mr. North Wind gets in his evil work, lashes it to cutaneous ravelings.

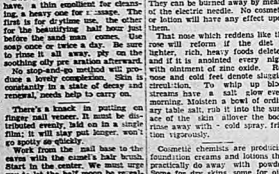
Two creams every woman should have, a thin one for her cleansing, a heavy one for massage. The first is for daytime use, the other for the beautifying half hour just before the sand man comes. Use soap only once a day; be sure to rinse it all away, pry on the soothing oily pre arations afterward.

No stop-and-go method will produce a lovely complexion. Skin is constantly in a state of decay and renewal, needs help to carry on.

There's a knack in putting on finger nail polish. It must be distributed evenly, laid on in a single film; it will stay put longer, won't go spotty or chippy.

Work from the nail base to the cuticle with the polish brush. Start in the center. We must urge you to let the half moon be revealed, it has a decorative quality. Painting the nail eats isn't a good idea. The neat, clear cut border line makes a nifty trimming.

Why will a long, lean woman put mama's striding clout in the pores, herself in a long, lean dress and a narrow high crowned hat? Her outline makes you think of a catsup bottle.



There's such a thing as overdoing the stream line idea. It is elegant to be slender, but a few cross lines make the feminine figure more interesting. Selecting the right hat is a woman's size job. Some gals never make a mistake. It is a gift. They were born with it, knew what kind of baby caps they should wear from birth.

Tiny, red, thread-like lines on the nose are ruptured capillaries. They can be burned away by means of the electric needle. No cosmetic or lotion will have any effect upon them.

That nose which reddens like the rose will reform if the diet is lighter, rich, heavy foods deleted, and if it is anointed every night with ointment of zinc oxide. Red nose and cold feet denote sluggish circulation. To whip up blood streams have a salt glow every morning. Moisten a bowl of ordinary table salt; rub it into the surface of the skin allover the body, rinse away with cold spray, friction vigorously.

Cosmetic chemists are producing nutritious creams and lotions that practically do away with powder. Some for dry skins, some for oily, some for normal.

Applied skilfully and neatly, makeup should last for many hours without a touch up. The touch up means a complete clean in the pores, a fresh start.

Clean Skin is the Basis Of a Good Complexion

By HELEN FOLLETT

If you would be on good terms with your complexion, pretty one, use soap and water freely. Keep it oiled for the sake of its soft, velvety surface, friend. In this way dirt and creams will be on the jump, fibers sturdy.

The neglected complexion carries a sad gray look. The skin that is not thoroughly cleansed gets muddy action normally. Scouring-takes off the dead scales and promotes normal coloring.

Soap is the queen of cosmetics, creams and lotions are mere queens attendants. Few skins rebel against it, and those that do are usually suffering from a case of slumbering eczema. Use such an event, the cleansing agent should be a bland oil. A tragacanth jelly, such as is used for chapped hands, should be used freely.

When beauty calls attention to it-self it loses the charm of inconspicuousness. There is the girl with pretty hands who must be forever waving them for us, that their charms be not observed. And little goody two shoes who parades her clean face and Cinderella so that all shall see and envy her.

Worst of all is the ridiculous young lady who makes it a habit to regard herself in the mirror, even when holding a conversation. Which goes to show that though women vote and thrive airplanes, there's vanity left aplenty.

When the nose is long be mindful of the tilt of the head. Don't push the chapeau too far forward nor yet let it hang down from the rear of the head. The nose appears to best advantage when the brim is on a level, that is neither too high or too low.

May we also suggest that the lady in the embalmed state be laid in order that is slightly darker than that of the face, so that the rest of the facial area? Thank you.

Sometimes small white, hard, beadlike masses form on the skin. The ordinary name for this blemish is seed acne. The mouth of the pore is closed, and these substances have banked up into a solid mass.

Sterilize a needle by holding it in a flame. Take the white point in full length, hold the wound open, pick out the white point with the needle point. Pressure is likely to cause injury to the surrounding skin structure. Touch the wound with alcohol.

To prevent others from forming, cleanse the face freely or iron the skin with ice. Main cause is sluggish circulation. Get out doors with you every day for a brisk walk, or do your setting up exercises, like a nice girl.

If blackheads are stubborn, make of themselves horrid plugs that stay light in the pores, rub rich thick soap into the skin with the finger tips, place over the face a cloth which is repeatedly wrung out of hot water.

Don't press these blemishes with the fingers. Use a comedone extractor which will not bruise the skin. You can buy one for a small sum at any drug store.

SEES DICTATORSHIP AS ONLY METHOD

McGill Lecturer Says Time For New Deal Here at Hand

London, Ont., Feb. 7 (CP)—"A new deal in Canada is long past due." H. Carl Goldenberg, financial lawyer and political lecturer in Economics at McGill University, told the Canadian Club here in an address yesterday. "Such a new deal," he continued, "must not be concerned merely with providing for the situation when normal conditions are restored. It must face the immediate problems before us. It can do this without establishing a dictatorship.

"The importance of geographic and political factors in contributing to Canada's economic problems, were particularly in relation to the railways was emphasized by Mr. Goldenberg. "The construction of railways in a country like Canada, with a small population spread over a large area, is a national obligation and it is to be expected governmental subsidies should be necessary." The railway problem in Canada should be studied in connection with the problems of other industries, he said. While the railways received direct subsidy from Parliament, it much also be borne in mind a large number of Canadian industries are subsidized indirectly through tariffs, the speaker remarked.

Tariffs Factor

"The economic structure of Canada is one of fixed costs against a variable income," he said. The development of the natural resources of the country and of its industries necessitated fixed plant and equipment erected largely with borrowed money. Lumbering is an annual fixed charges. The income with which to meet these charges is derived from the sale of our natural products in world markets. With a decline in the price of raw commodities, our natural income has fallen, he said.

"Tariffs may be considered as another major factor in our problems," he declared. "Tariff barriers block his prices are determined in world markets, whereas he is compelled to buy Canadian goods protected by tariffs. If we are to maintain our present tariff structure, we must be prepared to give tariff to the export primary industries through some form of tariff adjustment or by means of subsidies. If we do not do this we may definitely sacrificing the west and the Maritimes for the benefit of the central provinces."

While Canada exports one-third of its total annual production, the balance of our production is a total loss unless our consumers have the means to pay for same. They will not be able to do so unless wages and decent hours of labor are such as to afford them a decent standard of living and a degree of security. It is the duty of the State to insure that sense of security."

RENT RELIEF FOR EASTVIEW HELD

November Cheques Not Issued Till Investigation Made

Eastview, Ont., Feb. 7—(CP)—Payment of rent relief in Eastview for November has been held up by refusal of the Provincial Relief Administrator to issue cheques until after he has completed a check-up on all such relief in the town, J. A. Cassell, municipal tax collector, told Eastview council.

As all of Eastview's relief is paid by Ontario, landlords, who have tenants on relief get their rent from the province. Cheques were issued for rent in September and October, but when the Provincial Government put a new administration in charge of Eastview's relief, it is stated, the November issue was held up.

No More Piles

Doctor's Prescription Does The Work

Few Pile sufferers know that the cause of Piles is internal—bad circulation of the blood in the lower bowel. This is the scientific truth about Piles—the real reason why salves and suppositories often only give temporary relief and why cutting operations leave the pile tissue behind but leaves its exciting cause which may create a recurrence.

Your itching, bleeding or protruding Piles will only go when scientifically removed to stay. For this an internal medicine should be used. HEMROID, the prescription of Dr. J. S. Leonhardt, sold by good druggists everywhere, succeeds because it stimulates the circulation, and acts to relieve congestion.

Don't let Piles make you slaves fail and before considering operation, to try this internal remedy. Mrs. J. D. McKeown invites every Pile sufferer to try HEM-ROID with money-back if not joyfully satisfied with the help one bottle gives.

OLIVA DIONNE

First evidence of friction in the home of the Dionne quintuplets was revealed in a statement from Oliva Dionne, father of the Canadian woods babes that he and the mother and the five elder Dionne children were being "left out in the cold." It is believed that the parents of the quintuplets desire to have the Ontario government's guardianship of the babes withdrawn at the end of two years.

MEXICO'S NEW "RED SHIRT" ARMY

The first exclusive pictures to be permitted of a band of revolutionary youth corps, popularly known in Mexico as the "Red Shirts", as they appeared during a review before their leader, Congressman Arnulfo M. Peres (LEFT) The "Red Shirts" have announced their opposition to capital, religion, drinking and smoking. This active opposition has already led to the assassination of five Catholics at Coyoacan and the hanging of one "Red Shirt" by the populace. This body of young men and women claims to be the moulders of the Mexico of the future.

Spite Wife

by Ann Forester

Her mind, a redhot alive thing which wouldn't stay steady to think. Fred Wilson . . . terrifically jealous . . . confronted at last with proof of his wife's unfaithfulness. And Stan . . . Stan whom he hated. Caught—like mice in a trap.

Judy could picture the great desserted house, filled with echoes of the sea. The unflooded upstairs bedroom . . . the gulley pair—and to make trouble for Eunice—trouble for Stan who had unfaithfully snubbed her more than once, but she had not meant that trouble to take the form of murder. MURDER. The words leaped out at her in red, like headlines on the Chesterfield, a bundle of shattered nerves.

Judy dragged through frozen in the centre of the room. . . . Her mind was darting like a bright shuttle of fear—back and forth among the startling facts. Georgia had told her about Eunice and Eunice caught red handed . . . this was her way out! She had to tell Georgia. Oh, no! The rest of her nature rose in revolt against that loathsome thought. Never that way! Guilty though they were, she must warn them. But how before Wilson — and murder—burst in upon them! But there was no telephone. There was no place where she could flee. Nothing to do then . . . the old house stood deserted and isolated on the ocean shore. And at the very moment, Wilson was driving down there—death in his hand.

Judy was pacing on her hat. Pinning on her coat.

"Where are you going?" Georgia whimpered.

"Out! To warn them . . ." Judy flung it over her shoulder and ran from the room, not even bothering to slam the door behind her.

Her heart was a terrified thing, pounding her on. . . . This was the same crowded dream, when no matter how she hurried , she did not seem to make headway.

But she was in her car, which she had left parked at the curb. She was slamming in gears, driving as fast as she dared through the traffic without being entirely clear as to what she intended to do.

At least she was driving—on her way to the coast country. This was the road Wilson was taking . . . This was the road she had to follow. No short cut . . . .

Out of the traffic—driving along the Great Highway—the ocean rolling hoarsely to her right.

On along the Skyline Boulevard . . . the sunny little spot where she had parked this morning. . . . This morning—God! That seemed a thousand years ago, in some fabled time of peace.

The thousand years that she had been driving like this, holding the wheel to a steady 50. Racing with time. . . . What was the use—what was the use—a mocking voice seemed to whip with her, Wilson had the start. He was doubtless driving like a fiend. He would get there first. She couldn't pass him on a grade.

The grade —there was only one way to reach the house. The breath taking grade which had always frightened her. No other road led to that coast country. This was the only road Wilson was taking . . . This was the road she had to follow. No short cut . . . .

Short cut . . . The words echoed dreadfully in her mind.

The old railroad had been a short cut. It had followed the level shoreline, skirting around the indentations of the coast. The old railroad . . . .

Judy's mind seized on the idea, though her hands mechanically turned the wheel of the car.

The highway—that steep highway which she had always followed, turned away from the coast and darted inland, climbing a tortuous way over the range of high hills, stretched like a heavy horse in its path. The railroad had plunged boldly into the sea end of the hills, reaching the other side through a tunnel. That very tunnel where she and Nick had stood two years ago on that peaceful Christmas day.

The railroad was a short cut. It avoided the winding grade. If she could follow it, she might beat Fred Wilson to the house. The tire were up. Judy remembered. It would be possible to drive along the right-of-way around the point, to the tunnel —blocking the way . . . She couldn't get through the . . . .

And then her heart had leaped. The blood seemed pouring back into her heart from her face, leaving her cold with fearful relief.

No. She couldn't get through the tunnel with the car . . . but if she could get through on foot. . . .

And once again she seemed transported back to that Christmas day. She was standing in the chill dim mouth of the tunnel with Nick. She watched, in memory, Nick's tall figure—held it aloft and nod. "A signal fire," he had said. Two heaps of air in spite of the cave in.

That meant there was room. . . . a space not filled with earth. A space where a slim body could perhaps wriggle through the top of the pile.

She hardly dared to think. She was acting instinctively now, the machine seeming to turn of its own volition.

She had left the highway. She was driving over the bumpy right of way, tears of excitement and fright rolling down her face. Now and then when they clouded her vision too greatly she impatiently dashed them away with the backs of her hands.

Bumping over ill-kept roads that led through untidies farms. A Portuguese laborer in the field straightened up to look at her in amazement as she passed him.

Now the right-of-way again. Deserted country—rolling hills and a sheer cliff, dropping to a thundering ocean. Deserted rocky point where white breakers smarled. The very edge of the coast.

Bumping over the swells in the ground where the ties had rested. . . .

The yawning black mouth of the tunnel. . . .

Judy jammed on the brake and jumped from the car—leaving the door swinging loosely on its hinges. She did not even know that she was crying out loud until she had run a way from the tunnel and her own voice wakened echoes in the cavernlike space.

Then she hushed abruptly. Shivering, but silent.

The ground under foot was spongy from moisture, it squashed unpleasantly under Judy. A damp, earthy smell ceased by winter seepage. It smelt like a grave . . . .

Rotting timbers overhead. Wet black earth under foot. Chill and creepy . . . . Even through her excitement she felt the dead chill of it. Running . . . a lifeline she had been running like this, fingers feverishly gripping the flashlight —he had taken from the car.

The yellow spot of light danced jerkily ahead of her as she ran—showing the damp timbered sides of the tunnel—the spongy ground underfoot.

The tunnel curved midway — a curve which shut out the circle-ending spot of daylight behind, which meant the entrance.

Now it was dark with the exception of her flash. Dark and earthy —like being buried alive . . . .

Fear was lashing her on—fear for Stan and Eunice—a fear which was just a little greater than the supernatural fear born of these surroundings.

A draught on her face—like an icy breath. The draught which Nick had felt that long ago Christmas . . ?

"Nick . . . Oh, Nick, help me . . help me . . . .

Judy did not know that she had cried it aloud until the crowded about her ears making her heart jump. Tears, salt in her mouth. Blurring the blob of yellow light.

She had stopped, heart pounding shivering with fright. Playing the flashlight over the barrier which stretched before her.

One of the cross timbers had given away above, allowing a soft slide of earth to fall into the tunnel. A slide, which almost—but not quite filled it.

Before more earth could follow, a great boulder, embedded in the hill above, had caught and hung suspended, completely blocking the hole. The cross timbers apparently supported its weight, for it had sunk no further and would stay this way, like a cork stopping a bottle, until some rotting beam, or the seepage of water should send it crashing down here followed by a landslide.

Perhaps three feet separated the great hanging boulder from the side of earth which blocked the main body of the tunnel. And through this opening blew the free draught which Judy had felt.

A silent and solitary space, going on here in the bowels of the hill. A white faced girl, trembling with fear yet lashed "- haste, trying to burrow her way through to the free passage on the other side.

Carefully climbing the cave-in Judy set to work, attacking the small space between it and the suspended boulder. A terrible and endless task. Lying flattened, chilled, not only with the cold earth but frozen by the thought of the great rock poised just above her. By raising her head —by a careless move, she might dislodge that delicate balance and bring tons of earth and rock crashing down upon her. Years . . . before her body was found . . . if ever. Nick would never know what had become of her. Finding the car deserted there on the old path, he might think she had fallen overboard . . . .

God . . . don't think of that. Dig —carefully . . and pray . . . .

TERROR

CHAPTER SEVENTY-THREE

Terror — black terror pressing down upon Judy. A mountain hanging suspended over her flattened body. The smell of wet earth and rotting wood. The little yellow spot—light playing on the black earth. She was tiring almost flat now — one hand scooping back the earth—the other holding the flashlight.

Working in such crowded quarters she seemed to be accomplishing nothing at all. Yet now and then she hitched her body forward a couple of inches.

She was under the topmost beam now. Her desperate fingers down on her back—dripping on her hair. The image in Wilson, driving at breakneck speed over the mountain road. The image in Stan, driven mad by the horror of her surroundings. The age-old human horror of closed-in spaces. The primitive instinct of being buried alive . . . .

Judy's cheek with wet earth—earth up her nails. . . broken nails. Scratching, scratching her body. Inching along. No room to turn. Afraid to cry. Working in a desperate silence.

Ice wind blowing in her face . . . . Ice wind. A faint grey light ahead . . . .

That was over the hump of the cave-in! Wriggle down—ever so gently, feeling her hair and her back brush the wet boulder suspended above . . . .

Sliding down the wet black cone of earth to the sodden floor of the tunnel. Running in a blind, staggering fashion over the grassy bumpy where the ties had been. Running forward, the faint grey light which grew into the yawning mouth of the tunnel.

The mouth of the tunnel where she had stood that long ago Christmas day with Nick . . . in another lifetime.

Daylight, growing ahead . . . sunlight, golden sunlight. A vision of rolling hills and white surf and foliage . . . And down there—on the edge of the bluff, the old Carter house just as she had last seen it so long ago. High above —the narrow ribbon of automobile road. But no sign of a car on the road or before the house.

A sob of relief from Judy. Think then . . . she was on time. Stan's car, of course, would be around in the back of the house, but if Wilson had beaten her down here he would have stopped his car before the front entrance.

Judy was scrambling down the hills now. The May sun was already blazing with green. She slid more than once—falling at last length chilled body and her dressed dress.

She shakes down at all the windows of the big house. But of course, Stan and Eunice would be in the kitchen—down here in this deserted spot.

Stumbling down the last slope—her breath coming in painful dry sobs now, scorching her lungs like fire. Her legs, shaking so with exhaustion and excitement that they would scarcely support her when she wrenched open the door and stumbled on the porch.

The tracks on the driveway—fresh tire tracks . . . . The sight flooded her eyes with red heed of haste. She shook the knob —the door was locked. She beat on the weathered panels with her clenched fists.

"Stan! Stan!" she screamed. "Open the door! It's Judy!" Then, with a gleam of reason; "Stan, I've come to warn you Stan, there's danger for you, Oh—please believe her! He's trying to trap you! Wilson's coming! He'll shoot you. Stan I swear I'm telling you the truth! Let me in!"

The clamor of her own voice fell back on her ears. No answer . . . The pounding of the breakers on the rocks below the house. The angry hum of a bumble bee in a clump of marigolds growing wild against the front steps.

Little Benny's Note Book

I was talking to Mr. Riley the broken ladder driver around at the firehouse, and I said, Could anybody be a fireman if they tried hard enough?

He said you brought that up, because it reminds me of Sigmund Freg the poet, and an answer to your question is beautifully simple this feastways a poet dont make a good fireman, but he said, Sigmund Legg was a likeable chap with his curly hair and his rolling blue eyes, and he told us a sad story about the depression rocking the bottom out of the poetry business so he couldn't sell a pome longer than 4 to 6 lines and they wouldn't even pay for the title of the punchcustion, so we took him on for a trial. But his very first fire showed us it was a mistake, Mr. Riley said.

Why how, what happened? I said, and Mr. Riley said, Well, i may not of been entirely his fault, because I admit I never saw a more bewitiful site than that fire blazing in the hall room, so of course the scene appealed more to Sigmund's deep poetic nature more than what it did to his undeveloped fire fighting instincts, and he stood there and waved his arms and his eyes and his hair and made up a pome on the very spur of the moment, and went like this, as near as I can remember.

O the flames and the moon and the stars and the nile,

What a scene, what a picture, what a view, what a smile!

G. that's good, I said, and Mr. Riley said, It lit us all up with a kind of a poetic fever, and before I knew it I was berating eth with this:

Each lovely leeping little flame Must be extinguished, what a shame!

That's good too, I said, and Mr. Riley said, I was inspired, and so was the rest of the boys, and they all stood there spouting pomes till all of a sudden Engine Company Number 9, our hitherto rivals, dashed up and put out the fire before we could even think again.

So naturally that was the end of Sigmund Legg as a fireman, come to think of it, and a shame too.

Meening the end of the subjeck.

After a pause, the girl answered Tarzan: "Ivan Karenoff gave me the locket." Satisfied, the ape-man replied: "Come! It is British headquarters for you." Silently, she followed him but all the time her brain worked busily.

They moved east and, as long as he led in that direction, it suited Olga to keep him there, if this great giant. "The man must be crazy not to take away my pistol!" she mused. After a long pause, she asked:

"What makes you think I am a spy?" "I saw you at Red Headquarters," he replied, "and then again inside the British lines." The girl said no more. "I cannot let him take me to the British" she told herself, "I must reach Willhelmstal and—I will!"

She cast a side glance at the tall figure. What a magnificent creature! But yet he was a brute who would kill her or have her killed if she did not slay him. Olga decided that she would not be the one to die!

NINE INJURED AS STEAMERS COLLIDE

Rescue Work Carried Out Without Loss of Life

Philadelphia, Feb. 8. — (AP) — Nine persons were injured and more than one hundred rescued as the result of the operation of the Furness-Withy Line collided with the Reading Railroad ferry boat, Cape May, in the Delaware River.

LONG DISCUSSION ON TRADE PACTS IN THE HOUSE

Woodsworth And Macphail Say Too Soon to Judge Operation

WASTE VALUABLE TIME

Liberals Oppose High Tariffs of Empire Agreements

Ottawa, Feb. 8.—(CP) —Unemployment insurance and other phases of the government's reform programme come before the House of Commons today. Prime Minister R. B. Bennett has given notice he will ask Parliament to endorse Canada's adherence to a number of International Conventions dealing with an eight-hour day for industrial workers, a weekly day of rest in all industrial undertakings and certain provisions for industrial safety on which he will be based, in part, the proposed labor laws. Then the unemployment insurance bill stand for second reading.

Yesterday the House engaged in a battle of statistics over Empire Trade Agreements, much to the disgust of J. S. Woodsworth, C.C.F. leader and Miss Agnes Macphail. The day was spent debating the resolution of Joseph Harris (Cons. Toronto-Scarboro) that the House should approve operation of the agreements.

In almost equal number of Conservatives and Liberals praised and attacked the agreements, hit thing each one citing statistics to prove their case, but helped to hindered Canadian trade. Then as the sitting drew to a close Mr. Woodsworth and Miss Macphail entered a protest.

"We far too soon to judge the operations of the agreements, said Miss Macphail. They are probably only had something to do with the

$1,750,000 IS DAMAGE ESTIMATE

B. C. Storm One of The Worst in History of Province

By CHARLES EDWARDS
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

Vancouver, Feb. 8 (CP)—Rehabilitation of storm-stricken British Columbia continued apace today as estimates of property damage from the disastrous gale of Tuesday of January 29 and ensuing floods and landslides extended into millions of dollars.

Damage of $1,750,000, was estimated in a survey conducted today but this did not include the great loss in private property and the damage to standing timber throughout the province. Aggregate estimates of this damage probably will never be made.

In addition, the seven day tie-up of rail transportation and disruption of other communications, also more complete for five days, brought business in certain lines to a standstill and caused loss of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Shipping suffered enormously. Vessels were forced to leave port without their cargoes, others stranded somewhere in the mountains, in order to find themselves elsewhere. Other ships remained in port, paying demurrage charges, until restoration of rail service permitted movement of heavy freight.

Many longshore men remained idle during the storm, but others did and men were without work for days as sawmills on the Fraser River were forced to close pending action on the booming grounds and other thousands suffered enforced idleness in snow-smothered logging camps.

The two trans-continental lines lost at least $1,000,000 directly through the storm. The Canadian Pacific Railway estimated its loss at between $500,000 and $750,000 which included the feeding of passengers on five trains marooned in the mountains, the loss of extra and damaged equipment, extra fuel, the cost of snow gangs and damage to telegraph.

BRITISH NOBLEMAN DIES

Exeter, England, Feb. 8—(CP)—Sir Henry Hugh Courtenay, 16th Earl of Devon, holder of one of the oldest titles in the United Kingdom, died today. He was 62 years of age and unmarried. The heir presumptive to the title which goes back to the early 16th century is Frederick Leslie Courtenay, younger brother.

Slot Machines May Operate In City With Restrictions

Ruling Given by B. C. Donnan, Crown Attorney

Following the latest orders relating to the discontinuing of the operation of slot machines and such other devices a statement was issued today by local authorities that prosecution would be made of vendors operating these slot machines, providing no cash prizes or premiums of merchandise were afforded to the purchasers.

E. O. Donnan, K.C., County Crown Attorney, stated this morning that instructions had been issued to the local police by him to the effect that it would be permissible to operate and play these slot machines under the above regulations. Full copies of these instructions are displayed plainly on each machine in operation. Merchandise prizes and slugs received in a "jack pot" have been cashed in the past and are advertised as being played for amusement alone. As long as the vendor and the operator continue to do so and no cash prizes or merchandise are exchanged for slugs, we will not prosecute as there is no infraction of the law," pointed out officials to day.

According to a local police checkup there have been 27 slot machines in operation in this city, the majority of which are of slug-nature operation. A check-up on two particular machines, it was disclosed that the printed instructions displayed carried these words: "Have your fortune told"; and displayed on each wheel were many tiny printed proverbs such as "go to church, you may need the rest," etc. With the majority of the slot machines a cylinder of mint candy is given the operator upon the depositing of a five cent piece, but no candy can be procured from the machines when the ordinary slugs are used in operation, as the operator is supposed to be playing for amusement or to have his fortune told while using the slots.

Local police today informed all vendors and owners of locally operated slot machines that it would be permissible to re-open their slot machines only under the above instructions issued by Crown Attorney Donnan. The instructions, it was issued called for all machines to be disconnected last night at midnight.

Witnesses Tried The 'Shake Down' Says C. W. Bell

Ottawa, Feb. 8 (CP)—The Ottawa Journal today publishes an interview with C. W. Bell, M.P., of Hamilton, who acted as chief defence counsel in the Labaik kidnaping trial at London, in which he says the two defence witnesses, Seiter and Hall of Columbus, O., tried to "shake-down" the defence lawyers. Failing this they "ratted and got out."

Mr. Bell is quoted, in part, as follows:

"I never heard of either of these men until they made statements to newspapers in the United States and Meisner was in Covington when he was supposed to be in Canada.

"Both of these men had to be interviewed by my partner. When seen in Covington they stated in the presence of the chief of police there they had contacted Meisner from the first of May until late in the summer when he was arrested on the kidnapping charge.

"The statement of one of these detectives of what took place at the trial is a joke. He was excluded from the court room and didn't know what went on.

"Before they came on as witnesses they tried to shake the defence down and were told to go to blazes. They were informed that Canadian courts that sort of thing was not done. Then not being in a position to cash money, they ratted and got out. They beat the Provincial Police to the border.

"Meisner's statement these men ratted on him was perfectly right. They lied when they said no charges had been made against them, or Hall wouldn't have got into the witness box. Everything he has to say about what took place is heresay of the rottenest kind.

FEDERAL TAX ON GOLD ANNOYS PREM. HEPBURN

Toronto, Feb. 8 (CP)—The federal tax on gold will be a burning issue in the forthcoming Dominion election, Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn declared today. He quoted statistics of 1934 collections of the tax which amounted to $4,867,000 and said 80 per cent. of this is collected from Ontario mines.

"We have spent millions of dollars in developing the north," the premier said. "We have built roads and railways and extended Hydro at a terrific cost and when we get the mining industry in a profitable position the Dominion Government invades that field and collects $4,867,000 in 1934."

ENG. PEPPER POOL IN DIFFICULTIES

Unable to Market 23,000 Tons of Pepper Bought as Speculation

London, Feb. 8—(CP)—Pepper brokers of Mincing Lane announced today they had reached a solution by which all but two firms in the famous old commodities market centre will be saved from difficulties as the result of the attempted pepper pool involving $8,000,000. After long conferences the brokers' committee, although faced with the knowledge there was a back log of 23,500 tons of white pepper in London warehouses, said all firms involved, except two, could come through unhurt Monday after a weekend moratorium.

It was believed these two were being left to crash as a punishment for unwarranted speculation.

A number of firms were drawn into the tangle unwittingly, it was learned, and now bankers and other commodity brokers are coming to their assistance to tide over until reckoning day, advanced to Monday.

While these conferences were under way in secrecy, Garabed Bismirgian, stout Armenian "Pepper King" whose speculations were alleged to have originated the trouble, went his own way, telling questioners he would not know his own exact standing for a couple of days.

Bismirgian was on the directorate of James and Shakespeare, Ltd., metal dealing firm which was involved in the pepper speculations and for which a provisional liquidator was appointed yesterday. The action against this firm caused temporary suspension of trading in the metal market today.

Attic Flooring Under Question as Defence Closes Case

By WILLIAM A. KINNEY

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 8—Bruno Richard Hauptmann today rested his defence against the charges that would send him to the electric chair for the kidnaping and murder of Baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

The defence case ended at 12:10 p.m., after sensational testimony designed to place the Lindbergh kidnap ladder in the possession of a man other than Hauptmann three hours before the crime.

The defence also used two practical lumber men to dispute the testimony of a state wood expert that part of the kidnap ladder came from Hauptmann's Bronx attic.

Defence Rests.

One of these was the last defence witness, Edward J. Reilly, chief defence counsel, walked for the polling of the jury after a brief recess, then announced loudly:

"The defence rests."

The state immediately began rebuttal with Joseph J. Farber, New York lumman man on the defence staff. His testimony was sought to refute that of a defence witness who said he saw the dead Isador Fisch leap over a Bronx cemetery wall where and when the $50,000 ransom money was paid.

The defence used, in all, 53 witnesses, many of them alibi witnesses, and required 11 court days to give its answer to the state's charges.

Defence Case.

The defence case, in brief, was: Hauptmann was in a Bronx factory more than 10 miles from the scene of the crime, when Baby Lindbergh was stolen; the dead German furrier, Isador Fisch, and not Hauptmann, got the $50,000 ransom money; Hauptmann innocently took $14,600 of ransom money from Fisch for safe-keeping; a man resembling Fisch and a woman resembling the dead maid, Violet Sharpe, were seen with a baby shortly after the kidnaping; part of Hauptmann's testimony was found: Hauptmann did not build the ladder used in the kidnapping; Hauptmann's amiable his assets after the ransom payment case, unrecounted, from Fisch for stock investments; Hauptmann was in a musical in his home on the night of April 2, 1932, when Dr. John F. Condon testified he was paid him the ransom money in a Bronx graveyard; Hauptmann was at home for his own birthday party Nov. 26, 1933, when a theatre cashier says he spent a Lindbergh ransom bill, and persons other than Hauptmann were seen in an auto with a ladder near the Lindbergh home before the crime.

Speaker's Tea Goes by Board, 'It's Cut Off'

No Juggling of Teacups at Opening of the Legislature

Toronto, Feb. 8 (CP)—There will be "no juggling of teacups at the opening of this session," Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn said today in announcing cancellation of the customary reception in the Speaker's chambers following the opening, February 20.

"There will be no Speaker's tea," he said. "That was cut off yesterday. In this period of distress municipalities we are not going to spend the amount involved."

The Premier said 80 percent of the people of Ontario are behind the government in the move and the "over-burdened taxpayers on both sides of the province" are thankful they have a Government in power that will keep its election promises.

"Whatever they have at the opening of the Legislature is not going to cost the province any money"—he said. "If it does, it's off."

At the same time Mr. Hepburn took occasion to speak of the position of a Lieutenant-Governor in Canada.

"The Lieutenant-Governor is a political appointment, he said. His evidence you find on page Prime Minister R. B. Bennett's political minions, Hon. Murray MacLaren as Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick.

"It is unfortunate that a man of the character of Dr. Bruce (Hon. H. A. Bruce, Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario) is the incumbent of the office when the battle is on."

"It is a matter of principle, not of personalities," the Premier said, declaring that if he could find a place for Mr. MacLaren, 74 years of age, he would be pleased to have found him a position in his native province.

HAVE TO FASTEN ON FOOTGEAR

Something ought to be done about this", murmured dozens of pedestrians in the downtown section of the city yesterday afternoon as tacks they retraced their halting steps to recover loosened footgear.

It all happened, when the busy shoppers turned from the wet sidewalks of Front Street, where a bright sun shone, to the shaded, ice-covered walks on East Bridge Street. Mistaken relaxed by the soles of the pedestrians rubbers immediately froze in contact with the ice, pulling off scores of rubbers as the pedestrians hurried along. In many instances considerable trouble was encountered in freeing the stuck footwear.

And to add to the embarrassment, dozens of watchers congregating on opposite corners guffawed in hilarious amusement at the spectacle.

DOG TAX SALE AVERAGE HELD

Activities in the local police department were at a rather low ebb during the past 24 hours, no arrests being necessary. Eleven transients wended their various ways from the police station this morning after having been afforded warm facilities in which to sleep last night in the cell block. Reposing in Chief Kidd's office this morning was seen a valuable sheep-skin glove, brought in by a motorist, who found the same lying on the highway. A steady sale of 1933 dog tags is being registered at the sergeant's desk these days. There has not been a general influx of dog taxes this far this year, but it is believed, that the average is being kept up in comparison with other seasons' established police body. This year's dog tax is stamped with the number of the year "1935" and is made of aluminum metal.

RURAL DENMARK USED AS MODEL IN AGRICULTURE

Miss E. J. Guest Tells Women's Club of Danish Progress

FULL ORGANIZATION

Northern European Settlers as Immigrants in Model Centres

The visit to the city last evening of Miss Ruth Guest, Toronto, who addressed the Women's Canadian Club in the Collegiate Institute was in the nature of a homecoming. Miss Guest lived for many years in the city of Belleville and the High School staff and an active community worker during the years and as the beginning of the war. A large number of the present members and former associates of Miss Guest greeted the speaker on last night and found the same as the Miss Guest they had known. The same enthusiasm, the same keen interest in affairs about her and the same faculty for putting in the same faculty for putting in the words last evening as they had motivated her activities in the department of the High School when she was a member of the staff.

Mrs. J. W. Kinnear, in presenting the speaker of the evening, referred to her war time activities with the V.A.D. In London, her appointment by the Red Cross authorities to organize Women's Institutes in England and Scotland, also during the war, and her present duties as government lecturer on Household Science in Canada, also in connection with the Ontario Department of Agriculture.

Miss Guest whose subject was "Denmark" prefaced her remarks with amusing reminiscences about her teaching days in Belleville, and she paid a fine tribute to the women who were members of the High School "Women's Institute" and to the men who so loyally supported their projects.

Woman's Opportunity

"As a group, I feel you have done wonders in the past few years, are not exactly satisfied with ourselves, twenty years after the war. Here in Belleville you have eleven hundred young people in attendance at the Collegiate and St. Michael's High School, all fine young people getting ready for work, and there is work for them? You have to start thinking about that. You know there is a French proverb 'What woman wills, God wills,' so I think it is up to you women to start.

In introducing her subject, Miss Guest said that Denmark had been dealt two 'body blows' by Canada in the past twenty years. First, Canada, Denmark had been providing wheat for Great Britain, but Canada took her market and Denmark was left to the growing of wheat and turned to dairying, cattle, cheese, bacon and poultry. Bacon was supplied for the markets of Germany and Great Britain but at the Canadian conference, Canada gave Denmark another blow, by establishing a preferential for Canadian bacon with Great Britain and causing the Danish import to be limited to a quota.

In spite of this preference, there is more demand for Danish bacon in England than for Canadian, the British are willing to pay three and four cents a pound extra for it and will buy all that comes into the country. Bacon that is cured in different ways for Germany and Great Britain whose tastes are studied intimately by Danish representatives.

Miss Guest, who has been always interested in organization had a great admiration for Denmark, a thoroughly organized country, and determined to visit it last year when revisiting the institutes she had started in Britain.

Rural Denmark

Denmark and England are the most beautiful rural countries in Europe and in Denmark the deep green of the countryside the white washed farms with red tile roofs made an unforgettable picture in the summer sunshine.

Denmark made a remarkable recovery from the lethargy and despairing depression following the Napoleonic wars. The change has all come about through organization, one thousand farmers' clubs being now established for co-operative marketing. Although ver,' democratic people, th- have a great love for their royal family, "Friends of Denmar,' are not entitled to vote to elect members to the House of Commons until they a-e twenty-five years of age, nor can members under that age. The House of Commons representatives are elected for four years, but the Senate for eight. An elector must be thirty-five yea-s to votes for or be a Senator.

Senates Broken Up

Miss Guest, whose informal and intimate talk was sparkling with flashing wit, gave her hearers a splendid picture of organization in rural Denmark. The big estates have been broken up into farms of three sizes, eight to thirty acres, thirty to seventy and seventy to one hundred and fifty. The farms are immaculately clean, so clean in fact, that one hesitated to walk across the courtyard. Farming methods are scientific and the farmers work in closest co-operation.

Farmers' clubs, organized for farming marketing and cultural advancement, begin with the local branch, then county branches and national organizations. A national secretary studies tastes abroad and reports back to the association his suggestion for bettering the products. For their bacon they have central curing stations where bacon is prepared by special processes to suit the foreign taste. Down through the various organizations comes word to the individual farmer the kind of various products he can raise for export. The Danes' attributes of fair-mindedness and honesty make such co-operative farming a great success.

Agricultural Education

Education in rural Denmark is well planned out. Children leave public school at fourteen and before entering the Folk High School at eighteen years of age, they must show a certificate that they have worked on farms, factories or ships for four years. They believe that years from fourteen and eighteen are better employed giving children training in actual work with their hands than shut in doors. From eighteen to twenty-five is considered the right time for education, and the young men and young women attend the Folk High School where they receive tuition and board for twelve to fifteen dollars a month pursue an academic course and the study of scientific agriculture.

Denmark does not believe in war and will not arm.

Turning from Denmark and the manner in which she has worked out her problems Miss Guest discussed the situation of Canada with millions of unpopulated acres. To open up the country in Northern Ontario and the prairie provinces Miss Guest advised the immigration of skilled farmers from Northern Europe, where climate is similar to that of Canada, with the people from the city on the farm was useless. The settlers should be organized into villages, for it was cruel and uncivilized to put newcomers in isolated farms. When these villages should have doctors, nurses, agricultural representatives to consult, and the farmers, their churches and hospitals, schools. This would make employment for purchases of Canada's educational institutions.

She left with her hearers her plea to think constructively over this problem of the young people of today. "What woman will lead" she repeated, "and it is time for you to put your finger-prints on the century."

Mrs. Kinnear expressed the appreciation of the audience for the splendid address" Mrs. Kinnear announced that fine success of the book shower, one hundred and twenty five volumes being donated, and that the Women's Institute had made from the "favorite book" list of the donors and it was found that the book the women had enjoyed most in the past month was "The Royal Flush" by Margaret Irwin.

DEFENCE BUILDS A STRONG CASE

Prosecution Will Bring to Stand Rebuttal Witnesses

Topeka, Kas., Feb. 8.—(AP)—Behind its big barrage—romance—the government summoned forces for a counter-attack today in its second attempt to convict Major Charles A. Shepard of the alleged poison murder of his second wife.

With more than a dozen witnesses on hand for rebuttal testimony, Federal prosecutors encountered a mass of testimony to support the defence twin theory the death of Mrs. Zenana Shepard at Fort Riley, Kas., 5 1-3 years ago, was either suicide or accidental.

Against the Government's charge that the 49-year-old retired army medical officer's romance with Miss Grace Brandon, young blonde, Army Post stenographer, constituted a murder motive, defence brought out:

The defendant's own denial he poisoned his wife; testimony of witnesses, who said the woman had threatened or talked of suicide and statements of medical corps officers and physicians that Mrs. Shepard "had a definitely fixed idea of suicide" and the "stage was set for suicide", during her last illness.

To this, Major W. A. Rose, Medical Corps Dentist, yesterday added the statement Mrs. Shepard had told him during her last illness she did not want to get well.

In treating Mrs. Shepard for Trench mouth, Major Rose said four or five bottles of a mouth wash he described as poisonous were used. These bottles, as well as some capsules, he testified, were on a table within easy reach of the patient.

Major J. O. Dyas, an eye specialist, quoted the patient as saying she "knew all about life and wanted to know about the hereafter".

SLOT MACHINE UNDER SEIZURE

Test Case Will be Made at Peterborough Shortly

Peterborough, Feb. 8.—A slot machine in the store of Peter Costello, tobacconist, 99 Hunter Street West, was seized at noon Thursday by Provincial Constable D. Silvester and Sergeant William Wier, of the city force.

In confiscating the machine, Constable Silvester stated he was acting under instructions from his headquarters at Toronto.

So far as could be learned all other slot machines, estimated at more than 100, formerly operated in local business places, were removed several days ago upon the warning given by Provincial Police that all such machines would be removed from stores by midnight Monday, or they would be confiscated.

The one slot machine to be left in Mr. Gosselin's store, it was definitely learned, in order to make a test case of the ban on slot machines. It is said that arrangements have been made to enter a legal combat for the retention of the machine and to defend any charges that may be laid against Mr. Gosselin.

Constable Silvester stated that on Wednesday he visited the Gosselin store and warned the proprietor to remove the slot machine. "It was a store that I did not visit last week when I gave warnings to most storekeepers," stated the officer. "I warned him yesterday to have the machine out before noon today or I would seize it."

"Will any charges be laid?" he was asked.

"Certainly there will be charges," replied Constable Silvester. The confiscated slot machine was stored in the police station.

Publicity Scheme to Attract Tourists Favored by Chamber

Leo D. L. Dolan, Ottawa, Will be Asked to Address Members

At the regular weekly meeting of the Directors of the Belleville Chamber of Commerce on Thursday the matter of adopting some publicity scheme as a means of attracting a greater number of tourists to this district was dealt with. After considerable discussion it was decided to endeavor to have Mr. Leo. D. L. Dolan, of Ottawa, Director of Publicity of the Canadian Automobile Association, come to Belleville and address the members of the Chamber at the annual meeting, which will be held on a day yet to be set during the week commencing Feb. 18th. Mr. Dolan has made a success of publicity work with the Automobile Association; he is a splendid speaker and the directors feel that if he is able to come to Belleville and attend the annual meeting of the Chamber much valuable assistance may be obtained from him regarding the best plan to pursue as a means of bringing more tourists to the city and county. The annual meeting of the Chamber this year will be of considerable interest to all members; the details will be announced by the Secretary-Manager, Mr. J. O. Herity, at an early date.

A letter was read from Mr. T. W. L. MacDermot, National Secretary of the Canadian Tourist Society in Canada with headquarters at Ottawa, in which he stated that at the suggestion of Mr. Karl Conger, a former Belleville boy, now Assistant Chief of the Ottawa Board of Trade, he was writing to enquire if the Belleville Chamber of Commerce would consider taking out membership in connection with the League of Nations Society in Canada. The Canadian Chamber of Commerce at its last annual meeting passed a resolution cordially supporting the work of this society and since then some of the members Boards and Chambers have joined as Corporate Members. Corporate Members are entitled to send a delegate to the annual meeting of the Society and are kept in touch with the specific projects initiated from time to time by the National Council of the Society. The membership fee is small.

The Directors were favorably impressed with the suggestion, but decided to leave decision in abeyance until the next meeting.

INTEREST GROWS IN RURAL LEAGUE

Increased Crowd of Fans Noted at Stirling Games

Stirling, Feb. 8.—On Tuesday evening, Feb. 5, in Stirling arena, before an ever-increasing crowd of spectators, the tail-enders of the Centre Hockey League held the leading Zion's Hill men to a one-all tie. Glen Ross added two points to their credit by a well-earned victory over the flashy Bethel aggregation. The number of cash customers is steadily increasing and yet the games merit even more support than they are getting. At first, those who came, came to see their own boy or the kid next door, play, but now they come to see the game because the brand of hockey played is worth it. They go away happy and always come back for more.

First Game.

In the first game Zion's Hill had to hustle right to the last bell to keep from under the boys from back north, who are fast improving their style of play. With a four hundred pound defence, Zion's Hill is the heaviest team in the league, but Llewellyn Townsend the latter didn't look like league leaders. Townsend is under suspension until the next game as a result of the Dymenie Dunn affair on ice with Fred Fraser of Glen Ross. No doubt they will get their organized plays working when he gets back into the game. On Tuesday night they just couldn't click. Mount Pleasant worked several combination plays, only to be beaten by a bad pass and missing the net every time.

Both of Zion's goals were made some splendid rushes, breaking through early in the game, but no one was there to take his part. His efforts were finally rewarded when he scored on a low drive from close right in front of the net. Warren didn't have a chance on the shot. The second was made in the second period. A few minutes later Hagerman, of the Mount Pleasant team, split the defence, and drawing Seeley out, picked the top corner of the net as it is the game.

The last period was very dull hockey. Each team knowing that a tie meant a point for them while a loss meant nothing, seemed afraid to take chances. The poke checking and fast skating of Hagerman, who is called the Primeur of the league because of his clean, heady play, was a treat.

The game was without a penalty, ending in a tie.

Line-ups:

Zion's Hill—Goal, Seeley; defence, Denyes and Sill; centre, Ketcheson; wings, Llewellyn Townsend and Moore; subs, Gay and Brigg; coach, Hall.

Mount Pleasant—Goal, Warren; defence, Benedict and Hayes; centre, Hagerman; wings, Holmes and Potts; subs, Coggins, Sutherland and David; coach, Rowe.

Second Game.

Keener rivalry was in evidence in this game with the teams very evenly matched. Glen Ross, after a lighter team, took it but it was no cinch. In the dying moments of the game, Bethel had a chance to take out the play and did everything but score.

Glen Ross seemed inspired by the return of their flashy centre, Fetter Fraser, whose suspension for his part in a recent mix-up, was lifted by Chairman Cunningham. He is too, seemed to benefit by the enforced rest.

The forward lines of these teams matched their skill in numerous well organized plays. Although there was little individual glory coming to any player the work of Fraser, Riley Ross and Culhane of Bethel shared honors in a few spectacular rushes. Fraser scored the only goal of the game after four minutes of play. Bethel began to tighten down and from then on the play was about even.

In the second period Glen Ross had a slight edge on the play. They made many systematic attacks, and then raced back to their respective positions for the check. Under the guiding hand of Captain Dickey they took advantage of every break, but they were always cautious. The Dickey brothers and Culhane were all over the ice and in on every play. Ray Dickey broke through several times only to be stopped by Bert Hagerman in the Glen Ross net. Culhane's long shots were always a source of worry, especially when Earl Dickey skated in fast for the rebound. He was always a dangerous man around the net, making it tough for the defence to clear. Culver drew the only penalty for Bethel and Don Scott for Glen Ross. They were both for minor offences.

Bethel in the third period goal of last Friday night which resulted in Fetter Fraser's withdrawal from the game, these tilts were kept well in hand by his self ringers. Nothing got by these officials. A goal umpire was required in the third period because of a doubtful decision. These games are all important to the various teams and they are taking no chances.

The Fraser brothers played up to their usual form, and with Brooks, Brown and Scott, they make a very great hand from the Glen Ross supporters.

Earl and Ray Dickey and Culhane were speed artists all evening and were the best for their team.

Line-up:

Bethel — Goal, Dickey; defence, Cranston and Hedger; centre, Ray Dickey; wings, E. Dickey and Culhane; subs, Culver, Mayo and Barkley.

Glen Ross—Goal, Hagerman; defence, Armstrong and Brown; centre, Fraser; wings, Fraser and R. Brooks; subs, R. Brooks, Scott and Pyear; coach, Fraser.

Present League Standing.

Zion's Hill	12 points
West Huntingdon	11 points
Glen Ross	10 points
Bethel	7 points
Mount Pleasant	2 points
Evergreen	2 points

NO. 2.

In Talk No. 1 we told you something about one of the latest and finest discoveries of science for the comfort and well-being of man, INSUL-MOSS.

—Insul-Moss is a Canadian product, 100%.

—It is made from pure Canadian Sphagnum Moss, the fibres of which contain millions of tiny cells. Each cell is strongly built up of delicate fibres covered with a coating of gelatinous matter.

—Air cells are the basis of all insulation value. You are burning up money in your furnace without getting the requisite amount of heat and comfort from it if your house is not insulated with Insul-Moss. Most of the heat goes through the attic—this can be remedied with Insul-Moss at small expense.

Remember, the health of yourself and family, may depend upon keeping the house close to an even seventy temperature. Cost of insulation of Insul-Moss, in many cases, is saved in one year.

FAST KIDNAP TRIAL

Canada's first trial of its kind has been concluded with the sentencing of a man to fifteen years in penitentiary on conviction for the crime of kidnapping under the age of twenty-one years under the Criminal Code. The case, important as it was, was not so long-drawn-out as some thought it would be, but it was long enough to bring out what evidence there was to be had, and to satisfy a jury. Expedition and fairness are features in Canadian administration of justice. That criminal administration in Canada is there will not be complaints of the law's delay and that expedition thoroughness and fairness will always mark the courts of Canada, is the earnest prayer of all Canadians.

The lack of the spectacular in the trial pleased every one who looks upon the courts as the people on trial almost as much as the accused.

The judiciary and the people themselves have the right to be satisfied with the manner of the law's course in the Dominion.

Never should the people be allowed to lose their high respect for their laws.

Good, adequate law enforcement and fairness to the accused and to the Crown representing the people in all the Canadian people want and what they get.

Canada will not have kidnap orgy. There cannot be with our fine judges, our efficient police, and our law-abiding public.

It is probable that no people who are marked by law-abiding can suffer from a crime on the rampage, for crime is not rampant where the people obey the laws, even if there are home criminals. With stern law enforcement it does not pay to court prison by flouting the rights of others, but poor enforcement may give the unwary to resort to crime. No people should be guilty of permitting others to think crime is an easy way. The way of the law-abiding is the safe and happiest way.

SPOOKY HOUSES

It was not so long ago that one part of Ontario was puzzled over a house "haunting" and of course it was a house where things were happening according to no law of nature as far as the eye could see and the mind reason.

But the only ghost stories are doubtless the written ghost stories, not those that happen in some village or town in this form of strange noises and sounds, flying objects, moving lights and so on.

Strange that man should make ghostly visitants so terrible and frighten himself almost to death with the contemplation. When the odd man is in his less serious mood he watches out for black cats, avoids ladders and such small stuff.

But the real real ghost go to the mind of the insane, obsessed with the terrors over something which has happened or is believed to have happened. There are ghosts but they are in the mind diseased. That is what the modern man would say. And yet many men have known things wrong, and as far as known saw no ghosts and died in their beds without open admission of their crimes. Doctors say most persons die as they have lived. There are not so many death-bed repentances as might be expected. If a man is bad he holds out to the last.

Of course there are those who suffer remorse and see ghosts, somehow they fail to find solace in religion, in repentance and in punishment for wrong which has been done. Other folk suffer from hallucinations because of mental aberration, not because of evil they have done.

But average is haunting has not to do with the guilty. It is the admiration and amazement of folks who are at the time at least, in no jeopardy either here or hereafter.

In Eastern Ontario, near Perth, strange things were said to be happening in a house: stones from the fields flying through the windows of a farm house; meat stored in a barrel in a farm building scattered in the house; irons descending the stairways with regular thumps step by step; a soup bone thrown out again and again and always returning into the house. Those are some of the reported incidents of the affair. Strangely enough some folk claim to have seen these things happen and to have heard the attendant sounds but when others tried to verify, nothing happened. It may be that the spirits were too cautious to be tricked out of seclusion by the priest, the cop and the reporter. They had their chance to give manifestations and did not.

These affairs are tame and should not cause any disturbance of mind. Overheated imaginations are believed to give rise to these and a wrought mental condition might create just such scenes.

A society exists in England to probe all such happenings and a society works to that end in the United States. So far no one society has ever cornered a ghost or spirit.

Canada fortunately or unfortunately has not the ancient houses that the Old Land has and so those terrible stories of ghostly visitants whose aim is to frequent places of a deed of murder or some such awful crime, are not so frequent as they are in Merry England.

"Ghosts" are more in the line of the psychologist than of the policeman and the reporter for the one will find none to arrest and the other none to report and quote.

Stories of ghosts live on the flimsiest of traditions and questionings put them to flight, while the best friends they have are those who believe without proof.

A prize should be offered for the person proving the first haunted house in Canada. Doubtless the prize would never be awarded for common sense says no house is haunted.

How far belief in the occult is existent is a question which cannot be answered. There may be a trace of prehistoric dread of the unknown, as a relic of old religions of long milleniums ago when man attributed to objects peculiar power, that was the age of animism, one of the most dreadful of religions. It exists in Africa and in other primitive parts of the world and a trace may exist in the mind of the man who fears the dark, or the black cat or the ladder. But for most people this fear is just passed on from generation to generation and from mouth to mouth and if it were not it would never become current at all.

TALK IT OVER FIRST

Municipal officials sometimes complain about new legislation and the position taken by their representatives at conference thereto. It is suggested that in every county a meeting should be arranged between members of the legislature and municipal authorities, where new ideas and legislative needs could be discussed. Why complain, if your needs have never been made known?—Municipal World.

WE'RE GROWING OLDER

The people of Lima, Peru, have been celebrating of late—celebrating the 400th anniversary of their city's founding. And in that celebration there is a gentle reminder that white civilization on the American continent is an older thing than we usually suppose.

Keeping our eyes within our own boundaries we generally take it for granted that the traditions of the new world are all very short. But to go back four centuries into the past is to go back a long way.

When Lima was founded, England's fight with the Spanish Armada was still half a century in the future. Shakespeare was not yet born and Martin Luther was still alive.

A society that can trace its lineage that far back is getting on in years. Canada and the United States may still be youthful, but Latin America is, as human societies go, well along in middle age.—Kitchener Record.

A KING'S WISHES

Most people have the opinion that there is very little for a King to wish for. Monarchs are all regarded as the most fortunate people in respect to the satisfaction of their every desire.

But that is not so. The Europe who is lacking in three things, for which he has a most earnest desire. They are:

1. Subscription to a magazine with animal pictures.

2. Omission of cabbage from all Kingly menus.

3. Pants with two pockets.

The ordinary person in the role of King could fashion three wishes which would cover very much more ground; but they would not be quite so important than these three wishes are to this European monarch who happens to be Peter II, the 11-year-old King of Yugoslavia.

Four little Peter is most anxious about the two pockets. He has to carry a handkerchief, and when he pulls it from his pocket out comes also the private pieces of string, sundry pebbles, scraps of paper and his jacknife. It is rather severe upon his Kingly dignity to have to expose all these treasures every time he wishes to use his handkerchief and therefore he wants two pockets in his trousers.

Peter may be a King but he doesn't seem to be so much different from other boys of his age.—Chatham News.

THE COMEDIANS ARE HONEST

In commenting upon the fact that radio comedians continue to be extremely popular with listeners-in at large, an Alberta newspaper advances the theory that the people lend their ears to the comedy-makers so as to secure relief from the deluge of economic theories and arguments "which are tormenting a tormented world in these times." If this be the case, if may be regarded as a tribute to the public's common sense. The comedians openly admit that what they say is nonsense, but some of the real theorists are not so honest.—Montreal Gazette.

A rogue is a roundabout fool. —Coleridge.

He is rich whose income is more than his expenses; he is poor whose expenses exceed his income.—Bruyere.

FORGETTING

Now, you say, forget you
Why would that be wise?
Should the blind forget the Look of starry skies?

Must the lark, in winter,
Seek no meadow's green,
Cherish not one longing
For glad April's scene?

Does age count its treasures
By joys passed from mind,
Or do youth's bright memories,
Only, make life kind?

Now, you say, forget you
Even if they could,
Would that not forget the Larks above the wood?

—Aline Michaelis.

PLUTARCH LEARNED LATIN after seventy, Cato took up Greek at eighty and Dryden did not begin his translation of the Iliad until he was sixty-seven—all of which might make us think that life begins at sixty, or eighty. However, Louis E. Bisch, M.D., Ph.D., has a prescription for folks who find the years accumulating alarmingly fast behind them, which he voices in Tuesday's Ontario-Intelligencer. Says he, "Since three score years and ten no longer set the high-water mark for life, you may as well get used to the idea that you are likely to reach a ripe old age. Twenty years have been added to the life span during the past century. In the census of 1910 (U. S. A.) we find over 3,000 centenarians." Then Dr. Bisch goes on to give his prescription of health and happiness for these well along on their second half century of life which are the happiest part of life, he says, when a whole lot of things which used to worry us seem all unimportant, just fade out of the picture as of no importance. Learn to be moderate in all things, says Dr. Bisch, watch your health, develop a hobby, learn to love books, and don't neglect your amusements—such is his prescription, so that "free from passion, ripe in judgment, calm and serene in the security of your past, your old age will be a badge of honor and a blessing." That's the kind of a guide, coming, he, it is to be hoped, the dangers of the long hike past, and a broader, better and brighter trail ahead.

BABE RUTH, the dethroned home-run king, is not worrying. He is still on the New York Yankee roster and can have a contract if he so desires, but not at the big money he has been accustomed to, for he is from six figures down to a big, fat-trust account arranged for Babe's comfort when he gets ready to retire from the baseball business, which will pay him a comfortable sum every year. For next season the Babe is undecided—he likes the baseball game, the crowds and the cheers, and would like to win back part of the diamond entirely, but he has been offered, it is said $75,000 for a season with a circus. And so the Sultan of Swat may be the big drawing card in the circus next summer, riding the biggest elephant in the parade and knocking out a few home runs in Clown Alley during the performance. Babe Ruth has had all kinds of luck, good and bad, during his lifetime—he was brought up in an orphanage, no family, no nothing, but a pile of human driftwood abandoned to the tender mercies of charity. But Babe rose superior to all that, became the best known and best paid professional ball-player in the world —made lots of money, tossed it away, until his friends took charge of his finances and made his future secure. Then he was happily married for a time, but that smashed up, and other troubles followed, shadows mixed with sunshine, but Babe never lost his habit of smiling no matter what happened and all through the piece has been just another Peter Pan, the boy who refused to grow up. Any circus which can sign Babe Ruth will be assured of the enthusiastic support of the juveniles of the land.

A note on Civilization, 1935:—

SELF PITY IS DETRIMENTAL TO CHARACTER

It Will Eventually Kill Initiative and Self Respect

By Louis E. Bisch, M. D., Ph. D.

We hear a lot about physical bravery, but seldom, if ever, is mental bravery lauded. Seldom, indeed, is it ever mentioned!

The opposite of mental bravery is self-pity! And the person who lacks the one is likely to have the other.

Pity is one of the noblest emotions we possess—that is, pity for fellow-man! But pity for one's self —that is different! Being sorry for yourself in representable because it means admission of defeat. It shows right instead of fight. It stands for compromise rather than self-respect. It is cringing. It is begging. Worst of all, it kills the initiative to start again.

Yet self-pity is not an uncommon ailment. Every number of its victims is truly astonishing.

No man, woman or child can go through life without a number of its visits. Mr. Average Man:

When life hits, it usually imparts a telling blow. Then he will stopped at the first impact and wept, what would become of him? What would become of the whole structure of civilization?

Beaten defeat, but don't let it overwhelm you. Find out why you got the worst of it. Then take immediate steps to see that the same thing never happens again. Learn from the lesson of life—don't succumb to them.

Every time a person pities himself he shuts the door of hope. If he does it habitually, he bolts it and seals it tight.

If you happen to be a victim, make up your mind immediately to give the habit no quarter until you have made it and keep it there indefinitely.

Constantly watch your reactions to unfavorable circumstances. Be on the lookout for signs of weakness, depression, fear and discouragement.

Counteract your timidity by reading heroic novels, studying the biographies of great men, feasting your mind with stories of heroic accomplishments. Think lofty, inspiring thoughts.

Then back up your mental side with the physical. Go in for exercises in which large muscular groups are used. Take up combative sports like boxing, fencing, wrestling.

Make yourself mentally and physically fit.

Constant self-pity is like a narcotic. It makes one feel good for a while, then leaves one in a state of deteriorise one's character.

The habit of self-pity is hard to vanquish. Guard against it. Don't let it get a start. Grow your mind strong and robust. Fix a goal, then bend every effort in that direction.

Remember that the task that you cannot accomplish everything in a day, or a week, or a month, or even in a year. It may take time, but eventually, as you find yourself progressing, self-pity leaves you and you take on a new lease of life.

Dr. Bisch's Daily Diet Hint

After confinement, a mother should eat sparingly for a day or two, Milk, broth and toast are easy to digest and should be the sole diet, plus any amount of water that is desired. On the third day a gradual return to a normal diet should be begun, to prevent the development of weakness. Made-over dishes, highly seasoned foods, sweets and pastries should be avoided.

Angry Husband Cause of Three Being Deported

WINDSOR, Ont., Feb. 8.—(CP)—An angry husband, furious over the beating of his wife with another married man, was the direct cause of immigration officials ordering the three Keast brothers in Pontiac, Mich., to be expelled to Canada, subject deportation to Canada.

Charles Keast, last of the Theodosion, Ont., brothers to be deported for illegal entry, yesterday described the circumstances, which caused he and his family to be returned to this country after nine years' residence in the United States. Keast left here late yesterday with his wife and five children for their Northern Ontario home after his attempt to remain here on relief had failed.

The man, with whom the woman first had been a friend of his, Keast explained. The husband knew of this and believing the couple had gone to Pontiac communicated with United States Immigration officials giving Keast as a probable place, where the couple might be found.

Instead the couple headed for Toronto but in making their check-up officials discovered neither Charles nor his two brothers Algo and Archie, had entered the country legally.

"And now," remarked Charles, "our friend is back with his wife and the woman is sick with the husband, both couples are happy and satisfied and here are we in the soup."

LONG DISCUSSION ON TRADE PACTS IN THE HOUSE

rise in hog prices but there were other things to be considered and their aggregate effect could only be determined after a period of time. The House was simply repeating work it had done three years ago for no purpose. She warned the people were in no mood to stand for a great deal of such empty political manoeuvering.

Mr. Woodsworth complained valuable time was being wasted when the House might be debating government reform policies. He said first Liberals had attempted to block the reform programme by a vote of want of confidence in the government and now Conservatives were doing the same by "threshing over old straw of three years ago".

War Debate Ignored

The major defence of the agreements during the day came from Hon. Robert Weir, Minister of Agriculture, who called Jorg' rows of figures. He said Liberals had to decide now whether they favored the agreements or opposed them. From speeches of Liberal leader Mackenzie King no one could tell where he stood but the vote would tell.

The price of hogs figured largely in debate. Mr. Weir contended higher prices were due to the agreements and had placed millions of dollars in the pockets of the Canadian farmer.

On the other hand George McPhee (Lib., Victoria), argued the farmers were worse off as a result of the Conservative Tariff policies. He compared trade figures now with those of 1929 and 1930. He attacked particularly the preference on wheat, claiming it had not been a particle of benefit to the Canadian wheatgrower.

W. J. Loucks (Cons., Rosetown), challenged Mr. McPhee to come into Rosetown constituency and debate the agreements before farmers. He went on to allege two Saskatchewan Liberals, James Vallance, South Battleford, and Fred Totzke, Humboldt, had failed to secure nominations because of their opposition to the trade agreements and the National Products Marketing Act.

W. H. Golding (Lib., South Huron) claimed the Conservatives had failed to redeem their promises to find markets for Canadian goods at higher prices. Unemployment was not ended, as promised.

The Liberals, said Mr. Golding, opposed high tariff features of the Empire Agreements in 1932 and opposed them today.

"There is not one problem, that was facing the country in 1930, that is not facing us today," said Mr. Golding.

"I will welcome any discussion in my riding on these particular treaties," said Mr. Golding. He was elected by a by-election, where the treaties were one of the main issues.

Designed For One Thing

The resolution was designed to determine "once and for all" where Mr. King and his party stood on the agreements, said Mr. Weir.

The Liberal regime was notable for the increase in restrictions on Canadian trade imposed by the United States and other countries, said Mr. Weir. The Liberals had not only made no protest against the United States tariffs but had taken no steps to obtain new markets to replace those lost.

When the Bennett administration came into office it found the former market in the United States for large numbers of livestock shut off. The new government first took steps to give the Canadian market to the Canadian farmers and then explored every possible avenue for new markets. It was successful in opening the United Kingdom market to Canadian livestock for the first time in many years.

The Empire agreements had brought increasing bacon exports to the United Kingdom resulting in high prices for bacon in Canada. This in turn led to greater consumption of beef in Canada, giving the Canadian farmer a better market for his cattle.

After the report of the pig commission in the United Kingdom, said Mr. Weir, that country began to restrict its bacon imports, not by tariffs but by quotas. The Empire agreements enabled Canadian hog producers to share in the increased prices thereby obtained for the British farmer.

"In the past three years," said the Minister, "there has been an increase at the rate of 40 cents per in the price not only of hogs but also of cattle."

The Agricultural Minister estimated the treaties added $60,000,000 to hog prices in Canada, adding that much to the pockets of farmers.

Without the five-cents-a-pound duty, Australia and New Zealand could ship their products to Canada and make a profit at Canadian prices, said Mr. Weir. He estimated the treaties and duty added $13,000,000 to Canadian dairy farmers' income representing the difference between Canadian and world butter prices.

The Minister referred to the increase in exports of Canadian fruits to the United Kingdom market. It had been estimated by American officials Canada increased her fruit trade 36 per cent while United States lost that much.

Not Usurping Power

He combatted the arguments of the Liberals the government was usurping powers of parliament. He charged Liberal Leader Mackenzie King with having gone the length of ceasing treaties without authority or sanction of parliament.

Mr. Woodsworth announced he would vote against the motion on the grounds it was a political move.

Imperial preferences could be justified on one ground only, said Mr. Woodsworth—as a stepping stone to wider world trade. He called the Ottawa conference a "dismal fiasco" due to the Prime Minister's attempt to solve Canada's economic problems by stabilizing high tariffs.

The Ottawa agreements, said Mr. Woodsworth, made it more difficult for Canada to secure world trade, and there was no protection for Canadian labour, he added. "I think the evidence before the Stevens committee has shown we were right."

The agreements were heralded with all kinds of ballyhoo by the government, said Mr. Woodsworth, but they were not, as they said, to solve all Canada's problems. Have they solved these? I do not think any member of the government will say that."

There might be local advantages from the agreements, admitted Mr. Woodsworth, "but they did not, to any large degree, solve any of the large economic problems of Canada."

A. W. Neill, independent member for Comox-Alberni, also protested against the present debate.

The British Columbia member said it was possible to prove almost anything from figures. The Conservatives quoted figures to show the Ottawa agreements were beneficial to Canada but their figures proved the trade improvement was due to world conditions because world trade improved with Empire trade.

BLATCHLEY TRIAL OPENS AT ASSIZE

Constable Says Driver Appeared to Have Been Drinking

Toronto, Feb. 8.—(CP)—Testifying today in Assize Court at the trial of Harold F. Blatchley of Camp Borden, former Ottawa resident, charged with manslaughter because of a motor crash last December 16 that brought death to George E. Boothe and Marion Rogers, Police Constable Thomas Gardner said Blatchley "appeared to have been drinking" and was dazed.

Blatchley was driver of a westbound car crossing the Bay and Albert Streets intersection when it collided with Boothe's car. The constable told of arriving at the scene after the accident.

Blatchley had no overcoat on when the officer arrived because he had taken it off to cover the face of Miss Rogers lying on the road awaiting an ambulance.

Police Constable Richard Manson said the road was very wet but he did not find it slippery.

INVESTIGATIONS WILL DETERMINE CAUSE OF DEATHS

west of here. The truck was completely demolished and several of its occupants pitched forward under the wheels of the train.

N. P. North, acting divisional superintendent of the Canadian National Railways for the Lakehead division, said the company had opened an investigation into the accident. Dr. J. W. Cook, Coroner, was ordered an inquest and a jury is being empanelled for the inquiry.

The dead: W. Holford, Walter Holowenko, and John Adams, all of Port William; Thomas McGivery, State River; Ruben Killins, Nolalu; Steve Petli, Slate River; John Hermanson, and Tsiyi Nuna, both of Wolf Siding and Ernie Perri, Flint.

Hockey Player Hurt

Roger Rose, 19-year-old hockey player, was fighting for his life in McKellar Hospital here, while the four other injured were making steady progress toward recovery. Rose, member of Fort William Canadians junior hockey team, was en-route to Fort William on a hunting trip and had taken a lift in the truck.

Rose suffered serious head injuries. Matt Saari, John Bodnar and Ed. Mayoski were less seriously injured while another man named McGeady received injuries to his back and chest. Saari, Bodnar, Mayoski and Mayoste are expected to recover although full extent of their injuries has not been ascertained.

Raymond Palo, who, driving the truck, when the accident occurred, was detained by police pending investigations into the accident. It was learned Palo, who escaped injury had taken the wheel shortly after his father, John Palo, had complained of feeling ill. John Palo, who also escaped injuries, was in the cab of the truck with his son.

The men in the enclosed truck, seated on boxes and blocks of wood, were all relief workers employed on highway construction. It was learned one or two of the men, seeing the approaching train from their seats at the rear of the rack, jumped clear before the crash occurred. They were uninjured.

J. W. Slothers, the engine driver with many years service, said he sounded his whistle a quarter of a mile from the crossing and again 100 yards from the crossing when he noticed the trucks were not stopping. He had applied the brakes but was unable to stop the train in time to avoid the crash.

PROVINCE ASKED TO ASSUME LOAD

Hamilton Council Worried Over Increasing Relief Burden

Toronto, Feb. 8 (CP)—Appeal for aid in dealing with Hamilton's relief problems was made by Mayor Herbert R. Wilson and members of the Board of Control who conferred with members of the Provincial Cabinet.

In the absence through illness of Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn, the meeting was presided over by Hon. H. C. Nixon, Provincial Secretary. Chester S. Walters, recently appointed by Premier Hepburn as controller of finance, was also present.

A. J. Polson, city solicitor, declared the city is issuing debentures for relief at such a rate the Board of Control wonders whether this is a proper policy. Interest charges, he said, cost the city $800,000 annually. "We feel the municipality should not be asked to assume direct relief," Polson said.

"Who is going to assume it?" Mr. Nixon asked.

Polson replied they would like to leave it to the Province.

"The municipalities are not getting any revenues commensurate with what they are required to spend," Polson said.

The brief pointed out the 1934 bank overdraft was $1,091,113 of which $812,000 was for relief. It contemplated a tax rate of 50 mills would be necessary to balance the 1935 budget.

Province-wide Problem

Alderman Nora Henderson asked the government to permit taxation of Hydro properties in Hamilton. She said this would provide $200,000 of revenue.

The problems face the Province as a whole, Hon. David Croll said. The difficulty is the government has only limited sources of revenue, he said, adding the government realizing present taxing methods are inadequate.

Mr. Nixon said he had frequently heralded the policy of funding relief expenditures. "Ottawa has to some extent washed their hands of the responsibility," he said.

He would not reveal the difference between Provincial Revenue and expenditure last year but said it was "a staggering sum."

He referred to Hamilton private bills brought down in the legislature in past years and said Hamilton had been "ridiculously extravagant in its demands in the past."

He would not give the assurance that the Provincial Government would assume Hamilton's relief expenditures but promised governmental co-operation.

COULD NOT SEW A BUTTON ON

Her Hands Were Helpless with Rheumatism

At one time she thought she would lose the use of her right hand. But "a blessing,"—in the form of Kruschen Salts—put her right again.

"I was sure in a bad state," she writes, "in fact, I could not do my housework. I was so bad with rheumatism in my arms and hands. I would not sleep at nights, and I thought I would lose the use of my right hand. I could put on anything, nor could I sew a button on. My arm would go dead, I was advised to try Kruschen, and inside of three weeks I found such a change. I have kept on taking it, and now I sleep all night—thanks to Kruschen's help and relief."

(Mrs.) J. H.

Two of the ingredients in Kruschen Salts have the power of dissolving uric acid crystals, which are responsible for rheumatic agony. Other ingredients of these salts assist Nature to expel these dissolved crystals through the natural channel.

FAIR GRANTS NOT TO BE CURTAILED

Assurance Given by Hon. Duncan Marshall at Meeting

Toronto, Feb. 8—(CP)—Despite objections to reduce expenditures in the Department of Agriculture by at least $400,000 in 1935, grants extended by the Province to agricultural fairs and societies will not be curtailed.

This assurance was given by Hon. Duncan Marshall, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, to delegates to the 35th annual convention of the Ontario Association of Fairs and Exhibitions at a dinner last night.

Mr. Marshall warned the delegates against winking at a law and sponsoring horse-racing at their fairs. The prizes awarded for such races were theft, Mr. Marshall said, and from the breeders of sheep, swine and cattle, the real object of the assistance.

BOND EXCHANGE DISCUSSED

LAST YEAR, Oldsmobile scored a double triumph! Distinctive, airstream design installed it as the style leader of automobiles. High value gave it one of the largest sales increases in the industry.

Now Oldsmobile repeats, with a 90-horsepower, All-Feature Six, and a 100-horsepower Straight Eight . . . more beautiful than any previous models . . . more brilliant in performance . . . more lavish in improvements.

Establishing the value measure for 1935, Oldsmobile offers, first of all, solid steel, "Turret-Top" Bodies by Fisher. This revolutionary type of construction serves a dual purpose: (1) it puts over your head a roof of seamless drawn steel, braced with steel: (2) it gives smoother, more graceful appearance to closed models.

Complete insulation against sound has been engineered into the new Oldsmobiles. Knee-Action, proved and now improved, combines with the Ride Stabiliser to provide superior riding ease. Many other advancements . . . Hydraulic Brakes—Enclosed Tire and Luggage Compartment—Centre Control Steering—All-Silent Syncro-Mesh Transmission—Fisher No-Draft Ventilation—and Increased Economy . . . demonstrate in a practical way why Oldsmobile is known as "The Car That Has Everything."

Cudgel Taken Soon Out West

Toronto, Feb. 8 (CP)—Twenty-one cows of age and contest to munch oats instead of pounding big hoofs to the roar of the crowd, Cudgel, Brown cow of Bowcastle, will soon be shipped to Winnipeg, there to join the breeding farm of R. James Speers, Andy Lytle says in his column in the Toronto Star.

The great thoroughbred, however, bred at the Whitney Stock Farm, New York, is still the property of Senator Donat Raymond of Montreal, as Speers has secured him only on a two-year lease.

Cudgel was originally purchased by the late J. K. Ross and the horse stood at the Ross stud until the collapse of that fortune.

Women's Meetings

JOHN STREET W. M. S.

The Women's Missionary Society of John Street United Church held their regular monthly meeting on Wednesday, February 9th, with an exceptionally large number of members and visitors in attendance.

After the invocation by the President, Mrs. Hill, who was in charge, the devotional period was conducted by Mrs. Denike, who read a part of the 6th chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel.

Mrs. Singer rendered a solo which was very much enjoyed.

The topic for the afternoon, "Developing Missionary Thinking" was very ably presented by Mrs. D. Bews, as the introduction to the program for the coming months.

The speaker pointed out that all should examine the cause of the existing indifference to missionary meetings, and try to discover the things which will create interest.

Knowing Christ was the interest of the Apostles' fervor, and so must this principle be applied to individual lives as a basis for revised thinking.

Future programs aim to open up challenging vistas of opportunity to be alive to surrounding conditions and to the need.

The meeting closed with the repeating of the Lord's Prayer in unison.

HOLLOWAY STREET W. M. S.

The regular monthly meeting of the Holloway Street W.M.S. was held Wednesday, February 9, in the church parlors with about sixty members and visitors present, showing a keen interest was taken by all regardless of the severe wintry weather prevailing. Hymn 278, "O Master, let us walk with Thee" opened the meeting with Mrs. Hubbs at the piano. Mrs. Denton gave the prayer which followed. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved. Members were reminded of the "Worth Day of Prayer" to be held in Holloway Street Church, March 8th. The various activities for the week were given and the two delegates chosen to go to the Presbyterial Convention to be held in Picton on March 14th and 15th were Mrs. M. D. Denton and Mrs. T. Gordon Hall.

The newly-elected treasurer, Mrs. J. Hogle, gave the financial report which was very gratifying. The retiring treasurer, Mrs. J. McCarthy, was absent. The president in her remarks of appreciation said it was surely an honour for one to obtain and hold the position of treasurer for seventeen years, as Mrs. McCarthy had done so efficiently and faithfully and the gratitude of the W.M.S. was extended in the unanimous response that was to be conveyed by letter.

Mrs. Holmes, Mrs. J. Hogle and their group took charge of the program. Hymn 290, "O'er the gloomy hills of darkness" was sung and prayer was given by Mrs. Holmes. The Scripture lesson found in John 8th chapter, 27 to 47 verses, was read by Mrs. Westfall, Mrs. C. Moore read the Devotional Study in her capable manner, "A Circle of Friendship" was the theme. Hymn sang. "I Would Be True", which was appreciated.

Mrs. (Rev.) Newman, the peace secretary, read an inspiring paper and extended an invitation to the W.M.S. to attend an At Home to be held on Friday evening sponsored by the C.G.I.T.

The Temperance section, taken by Mrs. Leaveis, from a Saskatchewan clipping, stressed the point that the women of Canada had not used their ballots for Temperance and betrayed the youth of today.

The reading by Mrs. Fred Scott found in our church paper, "The Record", gave a clear conception of the needs in the West and the ready response by women, men and even the children, a commendable spirit of sacrifice as well as fellowship.

At this time, Miss Adams gave an interesting address with much food for thought. Her theme, "United Tomorrow", giving various church leaders' opinions and firm convictions, the one hope of the world is to be found in the Christ and the power of Christ and the greatest need of men and women whose dedication to God's Will is unchallenged. The whole thought conveyed throughout the address was that the clouds obstruct the view one must still steadfastly keep heading for the top.

The offering was taken by Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Westfall, and the Offertory prayer was given by Mrs. Hall.

The closing hymn, 272, "Jesus Shall Reign" was sung by the group and the Mizpah Benediction pronounced. Group No. 2 served refreshments during the social half hour which followed.

Walker, and Prof. Wheatley voiced the appreciation of the choir. The beautiful flowers were sent by Mrs. Gillen.

After the dinner Mrs. Waters invited the guests to Bridge and Euchre party at her charming home on Porin street. Prizes were won by Mrs. Fleming and Mrs. Cook (Bridge); Miss Peck and Mr. McCoy (Euchre). Excellent Reports Submitted At Annual Meeting of V.O.N

Ken Couch, President, is Returned For Another Year

Trenton, Feb. 8—(Special)—The annual meeting of the Trenton branch of the Victorian Order of Nurses was held in the Town Hall on Wednesday evening with a large attendance. The president, Ken Couch was in the chair. He stated, that he was delighted to tell the gathering, that it has never been his privilege to serve on a board where co-operation and enthusiasm had been so much in evidence. To endeavor to single out for special mention, any member of the committee would be utterly impossible. Each one composes one organization to a big cog wheel, every cog doing its work nobly. Hence to night we are doing a very happy and successful year.

But let me take you back about twelve months in order, that you may get the background for all this happiness and success.

The Local Council of Women had expressed the wish for a nurse, for 2 years and I want to say right here, and now, that the people of Trenton owe a great debt of gratitude to the Local Council of Women for their untiring efforts in this respect. After these long years of service they felt entitled to a well deserved rest but they would not give up until some one else was ready to carry on the work. The present board was formed but the Local Council of Women gave us the nurse, the car and all the clinic equipment with which to carry on and a substantial cheque besides. Therefore if you feel tonight, that this committee has made a good showing do not forget the pioneer work was done by the Local Council of Women. Under the circumstances I take just mentioned we began our years work. The Treasurer and Secretary's reports will give you in detail our year's activities therefore to avoid duplication I will only mention in passing that through the generous support of the citizens of Trenton we have a nursing system second to none in the Dominion of Canada in efficiency and at the lowest possible cost.

Nurse is Praised

I am certain when you listen to Nurse Haslam's report you will be served at the number of visits she has made and the number of patients, that she has nursed back to health. As President it has been a source of great pleasure to hear from all quarters of our town words of gratitude and praise for Nurse Haslam. I regret, that time does not permit me to mention individually all the citizens, who helped us financially during the past year but I would ask you to refer to the reports of the meeting in our local newspapers, as you will be interested to know these who are so pathetic to this worthy work. Personally I wish to thank Nurse Haslam for her excellent nursing service; Miss Cummings for her untiring efforts as secretary and to my vice-president, Lorne Foster for his wonderful help and advice, to Mr. Mackenzie our Treasurer, who can tell the people of Trenton where, how and why every cent of their money has been spent, and last but not least, every member of the board of management for their faithfulness throughout the past year.

Reports Given

Following the address of the president, the secretary, Miss Laura Cumming read her report, followed by the treasurer's report by Mr. Mackenzie. Miss Haslam gave a resume of the year's work which was worthy of the praise that was given. She told tribute to the many citizens, who had interested themselves in the Well Baby Clinic, which has made a marked improvement during the past year. The reports of all were accepted on motions. The various conveners were called upon to say a few words.

The next order of business was the annual election of officers. President Couch gave the chairmanship over to Mayor Cory for the election. In a few words His Worship congratulated the V.O.N. Society on their splendid work in Trenton especially among the ranks of the unemployed. Mrs. P. G. Burrows and Mrs. Morton Parker were named as a nominating committee. It was proven, that the past-officers of the Trenton branch of the Victorian Order of Nurses were all good workers for the following year and their entire personnell were returned by acclamation.

Mrs. P. G. Burrows, treasurer of the disbanded Local Council of Women, presented the V.O.N. with a cheque for twenty-five dollars. The following are the officers that were returned for another year:

Good Teacher Factor In Child's Progress

By LISA GRENELLE

"Well, anyway, I got into my English done," Mary Ann said. "I don't care about the dates."

Now its unquestionably true that some subjects are naturally easier and more appealing to some children than others, depending somewhat on the temperament and taste of the child; depending also possibly on the presentation; and undoubtedly a great deal upon the teacher, not only upon his or her ability, personality, character and temperament, but above all I think upon her attitude toward her pupils, as interest in Studies

Why did English matter to Mary Ann so much more than any of the other subjects? Perhaps she was gifted that way, had a flare for it? But if that was it, was it not odd perhaps that this preference had been displayed last year? Mary Ann's year on the contrary, no interest at all had been shown in history, but her year geography had been the all engrossing and important subject. Last year other lessons had been neglected for geography, even the latter interfered with. Mary Ann had encroached upon in order to acquire some further information concerning that subject. Previously science had been in the ascendancy Perhaps this natural fickleness of interest was just a normal phenomenon of development like the changing of intimates?

Mary Ann's mother might have accepted such an explanation if she had not known Mary Ann so well because Mary Ann being a normal, not a precocious or naturally studious child would not be apt to be interested in things that were not thought on any subject save animals and dressing if she had not received some challenging stimulus from without.

The Perfect Teacher

Mary Ann's mother visited her daughter's school. She had through various classes, the class presided over by the teacher who had taught the daughter science, the class presided over by the teacher who had taught her daughter geography, the class in which her daughter was now absorbing English as avidly and with as much concentration of effort.

As far as Mary Ann was concerned, these three teachers, and these three teachers alone had been entirely responsible.

Was Mary Ann perhaps a favorite with these teachers? One of the first things Mary Ann's mother noticed was that these particular teachers showed no favorites.

They assumed that each and every one of their pupils was willing, interested, intelligent "and respectful."

They spoke always slowly, clearly, with a minimum of words. They encouraged the children to teach each other; to take an active part in problems of the class, to add information of their own that they had gathered on their own initiative. They never laughed at them. Such are the attributes of the perfect teacher

Million Dollar Baby

Who is the screen's greatest female impersonator?

Many claims have been advanced by players who were long in the dupe of the public by their performances.

Of course, all these claims, with years of experience were able to effect mannerisms which lent credence to their effortless, but on the screen star has risen in Hollywood who shatters all claims for female impersonation.

This performer is little four-year old Jimmy Fay, who makes his screen debut in the title role of "Million Dollar Baby" which provides the comedy relief on the programme.

For Jimmy, distinctly a "he-man" as he calls himself, walks off with the honors in this amusing tale of the search for another Shirley Temple on the part of Hollywood picture producers. Decidedly a "man-Jimmy is fond of feminine apparel in winning a contract to be starred in pictures.

"Menace"

Thrilling and Suspense Packed Mystery Drama

A murder mystery that creates a sinister foreboding of doom and builds suspense with chilling effect is "Menace", which opened at the Capitol Theatre yesterday. An excellent cast makes the most of its many opportunities in this new murder-mystery yarn, which features such popular players as Gertrude Michael, Paul Cavanagh, John Lodge, Henrietta Crossman and Montagu Love.

"Menace" tells the unusual story of three people, two men of the world and a beautiful woman, who through an unfortunate circumstance are wrongly suspected of causing the death of a well known engineer.

Although they are cleared of any suspicion, the dead—man's brother, tortured by doubts and suspicions, becomes insane and vows to kill the three people he believes caused his brother's untimely end.

The identity of the avowed killer is skilfully kept secret, and the three people, living under his i...rer of sudden and horrible death, await the moment when he will attempt to carry out his plan of revenge.

Gripping Climax

When this terrifying moment arrives these three people and several guests are living in a secluded house, miles away from the nearest neighbour. How they attempt to match wits with a madman, following the sudden and violent death of one of the party, makes "Menace" one of the season's most exciting and interesting pictures.

Paul Cavanagh and Gertrude Michael, are excellently cast as the players who are involved in a terrifying situation by a madman. And Henrietta Crossman, Montagu Love and John Lodge are effective in supporting roles.

AT THE REGENT

"Tarzan, the Ape Man"

Highly Praised by Gordon Sinclair "Footloose Reporter"

Three years ago with a nervous lump in my throat, I stood on the deck of the Canadian Pacific Empress as it nosed out of New York harbor for a round-the-world cruise.

My destination was India, 34 days and nights eastward and I was the victim of more mixed emotions than I'll probably feel again no matter if I live to be a hundred.

At home were three children, all younger than four; ahead was romance, adventure, and a job of work, which, the more I thought of it the more unreal it seemed. It was going to be glorious, but it was going to be tough. I'd come home either a first-class newspaperman or a flop. There could be no middle ground. I'd pass or I'd fail. The result was going to be good or it was going to be bad. As it turned out, the results were good.

Two Best Books on India

One of the things that made me good was the books I'd brought with me, Rudyard Kipling's "Somewhere With Me To India," and Francis Yeats Brown's "Lives of a Bengal Lancer." I considered these the finest books ever done on India, and I still do. The first fascinated me, glamour, excitement and mystery.

After reading 20, I carried two with me.

In Hindoostan Itself I was lucky in that I met the author of one of those authors and soon followed them with an Indian book of my own which is still selling more widely than I ever dreamed.

He at that time was running tentative offers for the filming of his book by Paramount. He was highly delighted and excited by the offer but deeply puzzled as to what on earth they could find in his book to film. I thought that if they ever got to it, they'd have tremendous difficulties because the three big incidents were tribal warfare in the Khyber Pass, mysticism on the banks of the Ganges, and pigsticking out of Calcutta.

Hi one could transplant the mysticism and magic of Benares to a film; you have to feel and smell the Ganges. Nor did I think any Hollywood actor could ever dupe me of seasoning kill a charging wild boar with a hunting knife. There remain the Khyber warfare, with all the usual uproar plus the inevitable nautch girl and the rescue scene with an Afghan moon for background.

Captures True Atmosphere

But Paramount made the film, and I've had the chance to see how it. It is without question one of the finest films of any kind I've ever seen. Never have mad alone cameras been invented. There are no nautch girls, no love scenes against the background of an Afghan moon or any other kind of a scene. There is not one kiss in the entire 115 minutes of thrilling entertainment. There is not one thing that even a purist could delete. For less than 60 minutes are any women visible.

What director Henry Hathaway has put into "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" is manhood, the kind of manhood that's not soon done with the fitness-room mad alone camera. The pig-sticking scenes are all there. And they're the heroics.

Gary Cooper is the hero, a Scotch Canadian named McGregor. He is the same, however, assumes importance because of the fact that it is the last of this legitimate, and will be marked by pre-election budgeting, legislating and criticism. In general the trend of legislation will be an advance along social improvement lines. Much of the legislation that has been planned by the government will doubtless be subjected to the outcome of similar legislation to be brought before the house in Ottawa by Premier Bennett.

The question of the date for the election has not been settled yet, but the best prediction is that it will take place about the 15th of July, certainly not later than the end of July and not earlier than the end of June. The reasons for this are obvious. Alberta has a farmers' government and it knows better than fixing the day for an election at a time when the farmers will be either busy with spring work or harvest"operations. July is the time when there is a lull in agricultural operations.

The composition of the legislature, will be the same as in last year's session, with the exception that there will be only three Labor members instead of four, owing to the death last summer of the late Alderman Gibbs. M.L.A., whose seat has not been filled. The voting strength of the party will be: Government 36, Liberal 13, Conservatives 6, Labor 3, and Independents 4. There are 63 seats in the legislature. The combined opposition will muster 26 to the U.F.A. in giving the government a majority of 10 on all major questions.

A good deal of interest centres around the Conservative group in the opposition, which has evidently showing considerable activity in the previous during the past year. For the first time in the history of Alberta this party will have a candidate in every constituency in the province when the elections take place, and the group is the only one, under the leadership of D. M. Duggan, M.L.A., to expend any funds in the conduct proceedings out of all proportions to its small numbers.

government in particular has passed through spring floods which have rocked its cabinet to the core. During last year's session the government was led by former Premier J. E. Brownlee and a little more than a month after the house prorogued he was charged in a civil suit for damages with seduction. Vivian MacMillan and her father, A. D. MacMillan of Edson, being the plaintiffs. Mr. Duff forced the premier guilty of the charge, but the judge quashed the damage action.

The atmosphere around Parliament Hill in Edmonton is tense and fights are expected as between the various parties in the house. All the issues to indicate a party measure whatever the course of the legislative current may be.

The session, however, assumes importance because of the fact that it is the last of this legislature, and will be marked by pre-election budgeting, legislating and criticism. In general the trend of legislation will be an advance along social improvement lines. Much of the legislation of travel just why a harmful of British officers can hold that steaming, teeming land in its grip. It will make you feel very proud that you are British. If you are not British, it will make you feel very proud anyhow. My salaam and salaams to "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer."

POLICE COURT

Murdock Taylor and Claude Quinlan, two local young men, pleaded guilty to the theft of a six gallon tub of oysters from the premises of the local C. P. R. depot, when they appeared before Magistrate E. Dalton R.C.C. today. The accused men made no reply except to admit the theft. His Worship remanding them for sentence for one week, in custody. The case followed the mysterious disappearance of a tub of oysters from the C.P.R. station platform last Sunday morning. Plainclothes Constable Isard, later arresting the two suspects. It is alleged by the police, that some orders for sale of men's clothing, received by the oysters had been disposed of in Belleville vendors during the city while the remainder had been given away. Railway express officials discovered the value of the tub of oysters at approximately $12.00. According to court records neither Quinlan nor Taylor have been in any previous trouble.

"Send an officer over to the "Show Boat" and bring him in", ordered Magistrate B. V. Deacon, K.C., when Fernando Doucette failed to answer to his name, when called in open court this morning. Doucette, who resides on a scow known as "the show boat" near the Bay Bridge, was found guilty under the C.C.C. a two weeks ago and was to have come up for sentence. Provincial Police, who were dispatched to Doucette's residence returned to inform the court that he had left for the coast quite some time ago. A bench warrant for his arrest was issued.

Charged with obtaining money by false pretenses, James Green receiving a further enlargement today. Green has been in custody for over three weeks, charged with soliciting orders for sale of men's clothing, receiving a down payment and "not delivering the same." Three new charges were entered against the accused, bringing the aggregate number to nearly twenty charges already. Western Ontario as well as Eastern Ontario police hold warrants for Green's apprehension. His case is expected to be completed next Monday, at which time Chief of Police Ponton's evidence will be given.

WHOOPING COUGH PREVALENT IN CITY

Precautionary measures on the part of parents to guard their children against a mild contagion of whooping cough which is rampant in the city at the present time were being urged today by nurses of the local Victorian Order. During the past several days, attendance in local schools has been materially reduced by attacks of whooping cough and lagrippe, so prevalent. Many teachers report classrooms, only half filled during the present week.

WATCH YOUR STEP

We are anxious to co-operate with the Ontario Government in the matter of Accident Prevention. The year 1934 witnessed approximately 800 people killed and 15,000 injured by Automobiles, many crippled for life—in this Province. Most accidents occur between 4 and 11 p.m. and drivers around 20 to 26 years of age are most frequently involved. Please drive carefully, especially on Sundays. Allow the other fellow plenty of room. Carry Auto Insurance, but above all—place your insurance with us.

FINANCIAL MARKETS
NEW YORK - TORONTO - WINNIPEG

WALL ST. FINANCIAL

New York, Feb. 8 (AP)—Most financial activities were in good humor today and prices generally pushed quietly forward over a broad front.

Rails led the advance in shares, Santa Fe, Pacific and Del. Lackawanna and Western were up a point or more each. Other gainers of as much included American Can, Johns Manville Corp., Freeport Texas, Du Pont, Westinghouse, Republic Steel preferred, Columbian Carbon, Chrysler, Timpoth, Kelvinator Corporation, Dome, Liggett and Myers B, and preferred and American Tobacco B. The utilities were about unchanged to a little firmer.

Aside from firmness in Dome and McIntyre Canadian stocks were generally narrow, Dominion Stores, Canadian Pacific and International Nickel rolled unchanged to slightly lower. On the curb, Hiram Walker was steady, while Lake Shore ran up 3 points. Dominion Government bonds were quiet.

The board rooms were given a little thrill when a single transfer of 7,300 shares of Liggett and Myers preferred appeared on the ticker tape at 10:30 a.m. point. Even in relatively lively markets such a large transaction, involving $1,150,000, would have attracted attention.

TORONTO STOCKS

Toronto, Feb. 8 (CP)—The industrial share section, while firm, was not showing gains of importance in small fractions. Food issues, principally in small demand. As pushed up in the morning session but retained only part of the schedule early afternoon profit-taking while Nickel, the leading oils and the distillery shares clung to gains of fractions up to 1-2.

Volume developed some expansion but trailed mainly in the Interlisted group which had the support of a better New York market. Bank, construction, utility and food issues continued slow.

TORONTO MINES

Toronto, Feb. 8 (CP)—Revival of interest in the mining section made progress today, attended by gains up to $1.50 in the case of Lake Shore, inspiration for the spurt, which began Thursday afternoon apparently on the expectation that the U. S. court decision on the gold clause appeal would support the government's monetary policy. There were rumors also regarding a return of gilt-edge boost in the price of gold for which there was no authoritative support.

Lake Shore advanced $1.25 and Dome $1.00 and others of the big gold group added smaller amounts. In the secondary group the weekly price level advanced with trading heavy in Bidgood, Pickle Crow, Vanguard, God's Lake, Gunnar Gold and McWatters.

SUPREMELY HAPPY IN DEATH

her mother who died a year ago. Mrs. Reverend Mills recently performed a three-quarter hour operation on the late Mrs. Stinson's ban Hospital. In the midst of the operation, Puckering's heart stopped and he was pronounced dead. Dr. Mills massaged the heart and it started beating again after four and one-half minutes of inactivity.

"There was nothing out of the ordinary," about the matter said Dr. Mills, adding reluctantly: "Yes, it is unusual for a man's heart to stop and for the man to come back to life."

He said, however, he did not want his name mentioned in connection with the exploit but conceding his name was difficult for the British Medical Journal to withhold an account of the modern miracle.

STATE CHARGES MAN STOLE CHILD

Allege Kidnapping Took Place Thirty-one Years Ago

Sheffield, England, Feb. 8.—(CP Havas)— The trial of Henry Ross for a kidnapping alleged to have occurred 31 years ago—England's concurrent equivalent to the Hauptmann trial—continued today before a packed courtroom with Ross facing the words of Mrs. Jane Woodward, from whom Ross is charged with stealing her son by a previous marriage.

Prosecutor G. J. Mc'Cay charged Ross had stolen the child after receiving permission from his mother to take the boy on a fishing expedition. Mrs. Woodward, then Mrs. John William Wilson, "did not see her son again for five years. Ross admitted sailing with the child to the United States where he kept him in Newark, N.J.

Ross's statement as to the identity of the child's father was made by Mrs. Woodward in her testimony today. Testifying in the same courtroom now a bent, white-haired man of 71, electrified the spectators when she claimed he was the father of the boy and the prisoner. Mrs. Woodward had begged him in 1904 to take her and the child away from her husband.

Home-Produced Eggs at Fixed Price is Scheme

(By George Hambleton)
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)

LONDON, Feb. 8.—(CP Cable)—A marketing scheme is being prepared which involves a fixed national price for home produced eggs.

This price, it was learned today with announcement of completion of the scheme, will be fixed each week by a special committee of the British Agricultural Marketing Board and the price will be by the dozen, which retailer shall pay to suppliers according to grade.

Each week the national-fixed price will be made public so the consumer will know whether he is being over charged or not. The price is variable only in case of bulk sales by wholesalers and cooperative stores or chain shops which will be given a discount.

Producers everywhere will receive a fixed national-price for the week less any discount granted for bulk supplies and a station service charge covering the cost of collection, grading, packing and delivery. There will also be a levy, probably not more than two cents, per ten dozen eggs to cover the administration cost.

Every area of production will have a licensed packing station owned or controlled by the Marketing Board itself. The packing stations alone will be responsible for collecting, grading, packing and delivering eggs to the wholesalers and retailers. It is estimated 200 of these stations will be needed.

PARENTS GUILTY OF MANSLAUGHTER

Cruelty Case Tried at Valleyfield Ends in Verdict

Valleyfield, Feb. 8—Edouard Lauzon and his wife last night awaited sentence after being found guilty of manslaughter by a jury in the Court of ing's Bench. The jury heard their trial on a charge of murdering their six-year-old daughter, Laura and brought in a conviction on the lower charge.

The parents of the child, which died at St. Antoine Abbe, Que., on April 15, 1934, of penumonia brought about according to Crown contentions, of prolonged ill-treatment, were recommended to the clemency of the court and will be sentenced February 13.

In his address to the jury Ludger Colebeco, K.C. Crown prosecutor, declared the Crown had proved that for almost six months Laura had died by degrees, "It was a slow death," he said.

He told the jury how the girl had died after prolonged suffering and referred to the brutal treatment the child was subjected to—how she had been beaten with a bottle or no clothes to protect her, deprived of food and drink.

J. A. Legault, K.C., offered no defence, and urged sympathy and pity for the mother and father. He drew attention to the misery of the home, the poverty and the unhappy lives kills reason and makes people worse than animals." Ill treatment was admitted, but he declared good treatment was almost impossible, and notes there was but one pair of shoes for the eight children. "I cannot ask for an acquittal but I cannot find any murder in this case," he declared.

He reminded the jury the parents had not wilfully killed their child. He referred to the fact there were eight children living in the poverty stricken home, a small wooden house. He also asked the jury what would become of the other seven children of the family should the two accused be found guilty on the death.

Mr. Justice Archambault told the jury a verdict of guilty on the circumstantial evidence but of direct proof.

"Various instruments of torture and photographs are almost certainly those which were used before the girl was subjected. You can bring forth a verdict of murder or manslaughter. This last verdict is the one which you will probably give. A verdict of guilty is punishable and would be a very bad decision," Mr. Justice Archambault concluded.

SALVATIONISTS TO CONDUCT CAMPAIGN

Special Corps of Cadets From Toronto to Assist in Revival

For the first time in history a special corps of cadets will participate in the local corps of The Salvation Army, by a group of cadets-in-training from the Training College, Territorial Training College, Toronto.

By kind arrangement with Lt.-Colonel J. S. Bladin, Training Principal, a party of these cadets, numbering twelve, with Captain Edward Payne, in charge, will visit Belleville, March 12th to 18th inclusive and conduct an intensive Evangelistic Campaign for the good of the local Corps.

The group will comprise an instrumental party and a vocal party, old-time tactics and campaign methods will be employed. Special costumes will be worn in the open air, and the cadets' Salvation Army messages will answer the voice of the times.

Brigadier and Mrs. A.-W. Martin contemplate that the Cadets will during "why" the witness had declared it.

The gas station man said he did not remember the pictures of the Kidnap leader as well as the one he saw on the coupe.

He remained when he saw the leader it was "muted" where pictures after the Kidnapping showed it extended. "I didn't want to get a foot of myself reporting when I went in."

From Upper Tree

Ewald Mickel, employee of a planing mill at Lyndhurst, N.Y., was called by Pope.

Pope had the witness tell the jury he had handled 10,000,000 feet of North Carolina Pine and was familiar with the various grades. The witness said the attic board was "No. 2, common" North Carolina Pine, used in sheathing and similar uses.

Q.—What part of the tree did it come from?

A.—The upper part.

Q.—Why do you say that?

A.—Because of the spacing of the knots. They are wide apart. It's not butt pine.

Q.—I show you the ladder, rail number 16. What kind of wood is that?

A.—North Carolina Pine.

Q.—How does it grade?

A.—Number 3, common. Same grade.

More Life in Attic Board

Q.—Is there any difference between this ladder rail 16 and this other board (the attic board)?

A.—The grey-haired witness tapped the attic board, "there's more life in this board."

The defence attorney asked "If Mickle could tell whether this board and rail were part of the same piece.

Mickle said he believed they were not and the Attorney General asked the jury be instructed to disregard the answer.

Justice Trenchard sustained the objection.

From his "knowledge" of life in wood, Mickle was next asked to determine whether the two sticks were of the same piece.

Over Wilents' objection he answered they were not.

Reilly announced the defence rests.

Call Collision Witness.

James J. Parker, New York insurance adjuster was immediately called by the state in the rebuttal.

Parker was the chemist being in collision with that of Bethanain Patterson, chemist. Heiser had testified he saw Isador Pleich leap from a wall of St. Raymond's Cemetery on the night of May 31, 1932, at the time the ransom payment was made to Dr. John F. Condon.

Wilents examined Parker.

Q.—Were you employed April 2, 1932, where were you? A. I was on the premises of 1350 Ninth Avenue, New York City, at the Bethanain Patterson laboratories.

Q.—Have you had an automobile accident that night? A. I did, sir.

Q.—With what car? A. With a car driven by one Benjamin Heiser.

The scene of the accident, he said, was at 8½ and Fifty-fifth Streets, Edmund's Cemetery in the Bronx.

Wilents then turned the witness to Reilly for cross-examination and the defence attorney asked the witness if he had not measured the distance to the cemetery "with a tape measure".

"Mr. Arthur Lanson." Wilents called the name and Lanson stepped up to be sworn. Last week when Lanson testified Reilly asked if he knew, testified, Lanson was identified as the man who fired with Carlstrom at Isadore Pleich in Dunnellen at the time of the Kidnapping.

Q.—Where were you on the night of March 1, 1932?

Q.—Where was Carlstrom on the night of March 1, 1932?

A.—He was in bed where I slept.

Q.—What was the last time you saw Carlstrom that night?

In Bed at Time.

A.—I saw him at about 10 before I went to bed.

Q.—Was he in bed at the time Carlstrom and I saw Hauptmann in a Bronx restaurant.

Reilly then turned over for cross examination.

Q.—What date did you go to work at Dunnellen?

A.—February.

Q.—Any day?

A.—I don't know.

Q.—Between you and Carlstrom slept on the same mattress.

Q.—Tell what you were doing at 9 o'clock the night of Feb. 29, 1932?

A.—I don't remember.

He corrected his answer to say, "I think I was sitting around."

He was excused.

The next witness was Detective house Oscar Cristenson was called and Reilly, cross examining, showed Cristenson the attic rubber men. March 1, 1932.

Noon recess was called.

ENFORCE LAW

New York, Feb. 8—(AP)—One of the most intensive crime roundups ever staged in the New York metropolis rounded in the detention of approximately 400 persons. Police brought them in under the law which makes it a crime for men to congregate in groups of 3 or more in public places.

The purpose was believed to be a demonstration of the ineffectiveness of the statute. Most of State penal codes under which it must be held prisoners congregated for an "illegal purpose."

251 NEW MEASLES CASES

Hamilton, Feb. 8.—(CP)—Measles germs are working overtime in Hamilton. With scores of homes placarded, the Health Department had to send to Toronto for some extra-cards — a case was during the week-end. There were 251 new cases reported in seven days.

EELS ARE CAUGHT BY ICE FISHING

Considered a rare feat at this time of the year, fishermen angling through the ice on the Bay of Quinte on Thursday afternoon were fortunate in catching several fine eels on their drop lines. One specimen captured weighed well over four pounds. Dealers in fish state that so far the catches have been small, and few have been offered for sale. Cold weather this winter has resulted in little netting and less ice fishing.

SAPLING OF PINE CARRIED TO COURT TO PROVE KNOTS

A defence witness told Bruno Richard Hauptmann's murder jury today he saw the Lindbergh kidnap ladder on the afternoon of Mar. 1, 1932, before Baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., was kidnaped and slain.

Brevoort Bolmer, filling station man, a surprise witness, said the ladder was tied on the back of a green sedan and that Hauptmann was not the man in the car.

Hauptmann stood up in court.

Was that the man? he was asked.

"Absolutely not" he replied.

His answer to a request to describe the ladder, was a gesture toward the kidnap ladder in court.

"Why describe it," he asked, "I saw that ladder there."

A man and a woman were in the car, he said. Also he testified, the same car had visited his station several times before. His station is near Hopewell.

Question of Knots

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 8— Bruno Richard Hauptmann's rough wood expert offered further demonstration to his murder jury today in an effort to prove his contention a piece of the Lindbergh kidnap ladder did not come from Hauptmann's attic.

Charles J. De Bisschop, contractor or Watchung, Conn., who gave Hauptmann the lumber for the fatal "Rail 16" or the ladder and the state's theory that the ladder had no relation—an opinion that dissented with one given by a State expert—produced a yellow pine piece in court to show, he said, such trees have more knots near the base than above.

It was his contention the attic floor board from which the State charged rail 16 had been sawn had knots than the rail.

Attorney General Wilents asked witness to point out the knots and witness drew more knots at the bottom of the pine tree than at the top.

Pine Sapling Used

The contractor used a pine sapling about 12 feet tall, sawed in two pieces.

Defence Counsel Pope explained he sought to show the ladder rail was a "knotty" board. A board cut near the base of a tree, where knots appear more frequently.

The wood man was seeking to demonstrate the Hauptmann attic board had fewer knots and could not be of the same piece with the ladder rail.

Pope then drew from the pudgy witness the statement he repaired attic floor board which the state has matched with the ladder upright admitting no shadow of doubt to which it was nailed. The marks showed about, he said, how Hauptmann said it bore no marks of having been taken by the chisel, hammer or other instrument.

On cross-examination Bischop admitted the rail might have been" nailed to joists.

Pope Is Seen In Morning.

Brevoort Bolmer, gasoline station proprietor of Bolmer's Corner, near Hopewell, said a group of men in a green car stopped at his station for fuel during the early hours of March 1, 1932.

Q. How many times did this person visit your gasoline station?

A. Three or four times.

Q. When was the last time you saw the car? A. Mar. 1, about 8 a.m.

Q. Now what was it that especially attracted your attention to the car? A. A ladder on the top ladder on the back. It took me some time to figure out what it was.

Q. Describe the ladder to the jury.

A. Why describe it. I saw the ladder there. The witness pointed to the kidnap ladder.

Q. Would you recognize the man? A. Yes, sir.

"Stand up, Mr. Hauptmann," Pope asked.

Hauptmann rose.

Q. Is that the man? A. Absolutely not.

Man in Green Coupe.

Pope directed the witness to describe the man in the coupe.

"He was 5 feet 10 or 11, about my height," I looked right into his eyes. He was thin faced and his face was pale. He looked more to its width than any pictures I ever saw."

Q. Have you ever seen any pictures of the man in court? A. Not since? A. I think so.

Pope sought to have the witness identify a picture of Isador Fisch.

Wilents objected in lengthy argument at the gravesite interment being held in Edmund's Cemetery. The bearers were George Clarke, Thomas Clare, Fred Bowen, James M. Irving, James Whitten and M. Scrimshaw.

Rangers Stopped Momentarily In Winning Streak by Schriner Who Puts on Show for Amerks

Scores Nearly All Goals That Defeat Rangers by 6-4

LEAFS TIE BOSTON

At One Time Enjoyed Three Goal Lead Over Bruins

By A. E. PELFORD
Canadian Press Staff Writer

Any rookie who thinks he has a chance of beating Sweetie Schriner out of the honor of being selected the best newcomer to pro hockey this season had better start right now producing evidence.

The Calgary youngster went a long way toward nailing down the post-mid night when he snapped three goals past Dave Kerr to aid New York Americans defeat Rangers 6-4 and set up a better scoring performance than any of his rivals has shown in many a day.

For a while it seemed as if the former Buffalo Bison had dropped in form with New York Americans and would fail to live up to the brilliant record he made earlier in the season. All that was swept aside as New York last night, when he was the best man on the ice.

Schriner and the rest of the Gotham sextet needed a Ranger sizing of 13 games in which they did not suffer defeat. They had won 12 games and tied three. At Toronto the Leafs ended another one of those streaks when they tied Boston 4-4. They had lost three straight previously.

While Lester Patrick's team lost their main opposition in the Ace American division, Detroit Red Wings also were taking a licking. Canadiens defeated them 4-1, keeping pace with Americans, who trail them in the International divisions by only one point.

Bruins Edge up Point

Boston's ale allowed them to edge up a point on Chicago Black Hawks in the leaders in the American section, who dropped an overtime game to St. Louis to Eagles 1-0, mostly Bowman scored the only goal half-way through the extra period after Bill Beveridge had given a marvellous exhibition, stopping 50 Hawk shots.

Goals came in bunches in the New York game, Amerks scoring three times before Ranger mates were beat Roy Worters for four tallies in seven minutes of the third period. Then Schriner broke away for the final counter.

Lorne Carr opened the sharp-shooting five minutes after the start and in the second period Bill Brydges, Schriner and Art Chapman added to the American total. Schriner got another in the third before Lyn Patrick broke the ice for the team his father coaches. Butch Keeling got the second Ranger marker and old Bill Cook brought the club to their feet with two goals in 43 seconds.

Rangers were hampered by the loss of Bun Cook, who played only a few minutes, due to a leg injury.

Leafs Beat in First Part

Leafs had everything their own way for all the first and most of the second period in Toronto. Buzz Boll combined with Hec Kilrea and Gordie Drillon for the opening goal. Boll's only score and Joe Primeau and Charlie Conacher scored in the in the second period. Nels Stewart eased through for the first sign of Boston life.

In the final period Ebbie Shore, Boston's defensive mainstay, took things into his own hands. He had given the pass for Stewart's goal and now got the counter himself. Flash Hollett made it 4-3 for Leafs a minute later but Shore never quit trying and gave Stewart another to pass a few minutes later, that meant another goal.

Most of the fans were on their feet at the rink, when Harry Darry got the tieing goal with only 36 seconds of regular time left on a pass-play by with Max Kaminsky and Dit Clapper.

Only 4,000 fans saw the action-packed encounter at Montreal. After Pit Lepine had scored in the second, Canadiens hit their real scoring stride in the final period when Joe Lamb, Vic Veysbrich and Armand Mondou beat John Ross Roach of Detroit in quick succession and the only one Detroit got came from Larry Aurie's stick after a passing play with Cooney Weiland and Eddie Goodfellow.

MANY ROOKIES UP FOR TRIAL

Every Minor League Will be Represented in Big Time

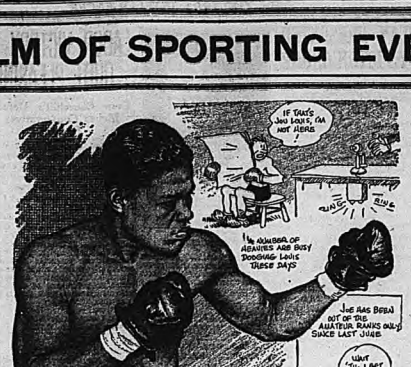
(By Eddie Brietz)
(Associated Press Sports Writer)

New York, Feb. 8 (AP)—Pitchers are green but hopeful rookies, culled from the ivory marts of 13 minor leagues, will be looked over by the eight National League Clubs this spring.

This is slightly more than half the number soon to go on parade in American baseball's newest, Seventeen — or one-third of the National League Crop—was gleaned from the three class AA Minors, the American Association, International and Pacific coast loops.

The International is sending six nine candidates, mostly to St. Louis Cardinals and Cincinnati Reds. Six are graduates of the Association's top section. The coast contributes two.

T. E. Reds, who have spent $200,000 for talent in a year or two, are bringing up 11 youngsters. Next were the Cardinals and Chicago Cubs with nine each. Philadelphia Phillies' smoking bought, drafted or traded for eight apiece. The Giants have five, Pittsburgh Pirates four and Boston Braves three.



Cincinnati is going to depend almost entirely on new faces to get out of the cellar this year and at least four of their recruits are pitchers more, are pretty sure to stick. This list includes Johnny Mize, $50,000 beauty who batted .339 for Rochester last year.

Dean's Battle About Salary Over for Year

St. Louis, Feb. 8 (AP) — Dizzy Dean's sporadic contract war with the St. Louis Cardinals is over for the year but the fans don't know who won.

Dizzy walked into the office of Sam Breadon, Cardinal president late yesterday afternoon proclaiming himself a $25,000 holdout. An hour later he was posing for pictures, pen poised over an already-signed contract and the battle was an end.

The peace treaty was for an unannounced sum but common consensus said it probably would assure the right handed exponent of the personal pronoun, a 1935 baseball income of something between $17,500 and $19,000.

Winnipeg, Feb. 8 (CP)—The Giants were falling in the Manitoba bonspiel today.

Into the consolation event were relegated such leaders as Jimmy Congalton, Granlee; Leo Johnson, Strathcona; Howard Wood, Granlee; and Cliff Wise, Strathcona. But they were still in the running for the Mcdonald Brier competition, which opened last night.

Congalton, Johnson and Wood, all previous Macdonald Brier Tankard winners, were eliminated from the challenge events in yesterday's games after the pair had been in the consolation event. Leo Johnson was winner of the Dominion championship last year.

BRIGHTON TIED WITH WOOLER FOR LOOP'S TOP RUNG

Trenton, Feb. 8—(Special)— The Trenton and District Hockey League is now on the second half of the schedule with a possibility of any of the seven entries getting in the play-off berths. Another doubleheader was staged at the Memorial arena on Wednesday night with the usual good crowd on hand.

Cities Service team moved up two points, when they handed Smithfield their third defeat by a 5-3 score. The second game was a thriller from start to finish when the High School got a hard 3-2 battle with Brighton. Brighton now on the top rung with Wooler. Hockey fans saw [illegible] in action again in a Brighton uniform. Vince has been transferred back to Brighton after a stay at Niagara Falls for some time.

Brighton opened the counting, when Lambert scored from Urunski's pass. This was the only tally in the opening chukker.

The second period he took Staple's pass from the corner. The heart-breaker for the students came when Gray went to golf a slow rolling puck as it came near the net but he missed and the rubber rolled in. Urunski made the weak shot, that counted. Brighton were skating fast and using good combination but the sturdy defence of the knowledge hunters went turning them back with Gray also playing a stellar game after he got going. Lambert made the score read 3-1, when he shot a fast one from the blue line in the third. With two minutes to go, Heaney scored for the scholars but they could not get the equalizer. The High School were playing well but had to be content with shots from outside as the Brighton defence were almost impassable. Every man turned in a good game with the High School not being up to standard. Urunski was a new thorn and will bear constant watching.

Cities Service 5—Smithfield 3

The Cities Service moved into third place with Benedict-Proctor, but not until they battled ten minutes overtime with Minaker's Smithfield aces to gain a 5-3 decision. The game opened with both teams boasting down four goals but the break went to Smithfield when W. Hansen beat Cain in the net when he came out to intercept a slow pass from the corner by Corbett. Benny Bowen evened matters when he batted in Hood's rebound. Thompson made the entry one for Smithfield during the period when he beat Cain on a shot from centre ice. Soon after the opening on the second stanza Davis counted on a beautiful shot from the side, to put Smithfield in the lead 3-1. A colorful battle featured the two playoffs during this period when Niddery and MacDonald collided, the former getting his head cut and the latter receiving a cut lip, neither being serious. Thompson counted twice in the second stanza to really show Smithfield's relative class. There were a threat in the league. Hutchinson, Fenn and Anderson scored to tie the count which was the position when the bell rang. In the overtime, Harry Long grabbed the puck at the defence to race in on Minaker's goal to score the winner.

CURRENT SPORT

(By Day)

Sensing the financial value of the situation the Peterboro team and the Campbellford Maroons decided that it might be an excellent idea if these two clubs staged a little series of their own, the winner to be awarded a cast iron puck and the group leadership. Considerable controversy was entered into yesterday with the final result that the clubs referred their difficulties to Eric Hewitt, secretary of the O.H.A. (just as if Bill did not have troubles enough of his own). Bill told the boys to settle the matter themselves with the result that a nice home and home series will be played between the Petes and the Maroons for the group leadership, they being tied at present. On Saturday night the first game will be played in the Hydro town with the return game scheduled for Peterboro next Monday, goals to count. Of course the suggestion of such a series being played for additional finance purposes is most absurd, why they would even so much as suggest such a preposterous idea. About the most disappointed man in town today is Eddie Thomas. "You see Reg, if we had copped that game in Cobourg, well, we'd be in on the extra pickings," moaned Eddie today. At any rate this newly inaugurated series will be a thriller combines" a well-deserved rest until about next Wednesday when they will meet the loser of the Maroon-Pete game.

Convener Ed Thomas announced today that the semi-finals and downs in the local junior group would commence in Belleville on next Monday night with the Napanee juniors clashing with the local Colts. Owing to the lateness of the announcement it was impossible to play this first game tonight as at first suggested. The Napanee crew, however, agreed to come to Belleville on Monday night with the return game being played in Gilbertville next Thursday evening, goals to count naturally. The winner of this series will then meet Sam Curry's group leading Tweed lads in a subsequent series for the group title. Incidentally the regular schedule of the local junior loop failed to determine the relative strength of the teams concerned in the playoff. Belleville handing the Tweed kids a swell shellacking here while Napanee administered a severe trimming to the locals, but themselves took a beating from Tweed-lads. (Figure it out for yourself.)

Interscholastic basketball holds sway at the B.C.I. tonight when a twin bill is on the card, Picton C. I. providing the opposition for the local school hoopsters. When the Laughlin-coached B.C.I. crews journeyed to Picton three weeks ago the local seniors were given a late defeat, although the tri-color juniors from the local area of Bayside swept aside all before them to bring home the bacon. The local high schools come down in front this evening, the win will give them the group honors but the B.C.I. seniors must win to keep in second place even.

The future success of Belleville baseball activities seems to be a matter of major public interest, especially to outside points of late. Repeatedly the sport scribes in Eastern Ontario have taken it upon themselves to travel far from the beaten path of duty to write up not only meddle, but actually endeavor to direct their gossipings on the economics of baseball in Belleville. For many years the diamond pastime has flourished in this fair city without the verbal assistance of outsiders and as a result give hope that such will be the case for many years to come. The very latest dabbling comes from no less a hamlet than Napanee, the home of two perpetual championship ball clubs. Recently in the Nananee Beaver under the captain of Napanee's nine and the headlines "the laugh of the week",

"With the fires in the cauldron of the Hot Stove League seemingly all low ebb, the flames roar with merriment in response to that foolhardy and most erroneous statement emanating from Belleville, the Beautiful.

"Apparently the Alemite Corporation have assumed control of the intermediate baseball franchise in that fair city, and the executive members have declared that "they are going to put intermediate ball on the map in Eastern Ontario". It is a laugh!

"The rash and uncalled for lingo could be overlooked, was not Belleville situated a scant twenty-five miles from the home of the present intermediate "A" and "B" champions of Ontario — Gilbertville. When Belleville can equal this noteworthy feat, it will be time to sit back and listen to such a proud boast! Possibly those two trunings (what) it means administered to that so-called Belleville senior club by the champion Gilbert A's still rankles!

"It would be well worth the while if our "big city" neighbors spent less time moaning in the gathering together a team worthy to be termed "seniors" instead of wasting their time in idle chatter. Anyone with brains could see that intermediate ball wouldn't draw a "corporal's guard" in a city that had once captured two Ontario senior championships and which had grown accustomed to witnessing senior baseball over a long period of years.

"It is altogether likely that Belleville will be represented this year in senior ball (and as long as twenty is around) but when the majority of the senior players of the Alemite, the logical answer that they will play with the "new" intermediates which (so they say) is "going to be the talk of Eastern Ontario." And the net result of this will be a shell of a team finishing at the bottom of the rung in the Central League.

"While on the subject of our favorite sport, we learn that the latest word from Picton is that they will not be re-cast into the Bay of Quinte League in 1935, because the fans strongly resent their "died in the wool" home-brew of locally sainted "packed" teams such as the champion Grinded "A" outfit. Home-brew is certainly the ideal name for that Picton team as witness the "empties" left in their wake at the Gilbard Memorial Park last summer.

"Speaking of imports, we wonder if such Ontario have taken the time to mention others) first saw the light of day in Picton if they have learned and always played the game as that they now display?

"Picton, a team that was strong enough to throw a big scare into Walt Grove's gang in the play-offs and desire to drop back into intermediate ball? Shades of Ananias, they announce the daylights out of such a team as Westlake, Wooler, Ontario, etc., and have the town band joyfully break into the strains of "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here Come"!

"Friendly winners, but what poor losers."

The origin of it was not discovered until early Wednesday morning. It is the water from the radiator had caused part of the plaster from Mr. Ward's ceiling to fall, but other damage to the office was also caused by water.

Mrs. Thomas Kennedy entertained the Mission Circle of the Baptist church at her home on Union Street, Monday afternoon. A large number of members were present. MR. AND MRS. DIONNE VISITS NIGHT CLUB

Stayed Till Early Hour to Witness Floor Show

Chicago, Feb. 5.—(CAP)—Mr. and Mrs. Oliva Dionne got their wish—they visited a night club. From the glitter of the floor show to the champagne corks that popped in their honor, the Dionnes lived through the story brought fire-fold fame, seemed to relish their brief venture you among the bright lights.

And they stayed until an early hour today, the Dionnes and their couple on their first visit to a big American night club. It was after 4 o'clock, when the Dionnes wearily went back to their luxurious suite in the Stevens hotel.

No spangled evening frock for Mrs. Oliva Dionne; she appeared on her first "night out". She wore a simple afternoon and a dark hat, while her husband watched the floor show in a dark business suit. Mrs. Dionne's escort that evening to strike the most amazement from the Canadian lassie. Mrs. Dionne held them speechless for a few moments. Then Papa Dionne expressed himself jovially: "Mrs. Dionne more quietly in her French patios. Mrs. Dionne was overcome by them on their excursion as it has by the time they returned to the hotel from stockyards to the Old World's Fair grounds.

Earlier in the day yesterday, Mrs. Dionne gave some advice about the rearing of children.

"I do not spoil my children by always giving them everything they," she said, calling attention to five children who have not been as widely publicized as her famous quintuplets. "When my babies did not behave, I gave them one 'dose' —a little spanking. Not a hard one, but enough to make them understand.

And the Dionnes didn't forget Mr. Allan Dafoe back home in Callander. To him they sent a telegram asking him to visit them in Chicago.

"We are going to Mayor Kelly's office and will be blessed by Cardinal Mundelein," said the message. "Kiss the children for us".

Today they were scheduled to visit the Chicago Lyin-In Hospital from which the first human milk was dispatched by plane to their Canadian home shortly after the quintuplets were born.

PLAY PRESENTED BY PICTON GROUP

"Broken English" Well Received at Carrying Place

Carrying Place—Although viewed by a disappointingly small crowd, the play, "Broken English", presented in the local Parish Hall on Friday evening last by a cast of young people from St. Mary Magdalene A. Y. P. A, in Picton, was most enthusiastically received, and has been pronounced by many as the cleverest and most entertaining theatrical to be given locally in years. Special praise for his splendid portrayal of the difficult role of an Italian immigrant was given Mr Reg. Abraham of Picton who convulsed the audience with his antics even when he was tugging at their heartstrings with his characterization of a father who was trying to be a real pal to a family who thought him rather uncouth for their friends. Yet every member of the cast performed so well that praise should be almost equally divided. The play was given here under the auspices of St. John's Anglican Church; and after the presentation the cast were entertained at the Rectory by Rev. Arthur Strother and Mrs. Strother.

Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Young, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hicks, Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Hicks, have found the first few days of their married life quite eventful, with charivaris, parties and receptions tendered each other. On Tuesday evening last t..e shot-gun-and-tin-pan brigade gathered outside their home and gave them a real orchestral greeting. On Wednesday evening and again on Monday friends invaded their home to congratulate and present a large crowd gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Bowers, Bloomfield.

The exhibition hockey game between the local team and the Consecon Juniors, scheduled for last Wednesday evening at the Wellington arena, has been cancelled off as the management have been unable to give their players the use of uniforms. Both outfits looked forward to the workout against each other. With Consecon having defeated Picton and District League and with the locals sitting in second place in the Trenton loop, both should be able to show plenty. However, opportunity may present itself again later for the two to meet. Meanwhile the locals are looking forward, none too hopefully to their meetings on Friday evening next with the Wooler juniors. Wooler have a fast and well-balanced team with a rugged defence and they feel decided their present high rating. There will be three games in the Trenton Arena on Friday and Mr. John Pan should certainly not kick over the price — it is only 25c per game.

The 109th harvest is about finished. Most of the local ice-cutters have put away smaller packs than usual, and with good weather favouring, as it did, the harvest was soon complete. Mr. Vernon Westfall trucked to the Norman place and came to it 7c. Will Corrigan as well as to the M. Westfall store.

After spending a week in Trenton with friends Miss Nora Hennessey returned home.

Tuesday was particularly cold as later used wind swept across the flat stretch of land between the two bays.

The number of local young fellows, apparently quite without fear of the Jack Frost they plunged, soon met in the blacksmith shop for a few friendly boxing bouts. Sometimes with the mercury hovering well below the zero mark, one can imagine more pleasant settings for the flutz sport.

Miss Helen MacDougall was present at the staging of the play "Broken English" on Friday evening last.

The stamp-collecting bug has been biting again, and lads at the local school are getting new swapping records.

Local interest in the prowess of the Toronto Maple Leafs seems to have lessened, at least until the play-offs begin. When they lost to Americans on Saturday last, the "gang" who congregate regularly at the store for the games hardly expressed a regret.

After her recent attack of illness Miss Grace Rathbun is slightly improved.

Mrs. A. Urquhart, who has enjoyed very good health since her arrival here some months ago from Belleville to take up her residence with her daughter, Mrs. Harry La Tour, is suffering at present from an undefined illness, and has been confined to her bed for a few days. Her many friends wish her a speedy recovery.

Mr. David Bulpit, confined to Belleville General hospital for the past few weeks following a stroke suffered there, is reported to be in a very critical condition.

LABOR VICTORY QUITE PLEASING

Even Churchill's Defeat Makes Conservatives Ponder

Liverpool, England, Feb. 7 (CP Cable)—The Labor Party was jubilant today over the recapture of the Wavertree seat from the Conservatives in yesterday's by-election — the ninth since recovery since the landslide of 1931.

Conservatives claimed the loss was due solely to the split vote caused by the candidacy of Randolph Churchill, Independent Conservative, but the result was causing much pondering in Conservative party ranks since Churchill, hotly opposing the government's programme of further self-government for India, was given more than 10,000 votes.

The result was:

J. J. Cleary, Labor 15,611.

James Platt, Con. 13,771.

Randolph Churchill, Ind.-Con. 10,575.

Arno Morris, Liberal 4,308.

From the Conservative party standpoint the result of course was not as discouraging as it would have been if young Churchill was elected.

IS TRANSFERRED TO HILLSBURGH

Tweed, Feb. 5—An interesting meeting was held on Monday night of Young People in the United Church with the president, Miss Jessie Gordon in the chair. After the opening hymn and prayer, the leader of the Christian Fellowship Department, Miss Dorothy Barnett took charge of the meeting. She read the second chapter of "Transforming Friendships".

A number of the members were called upon to read interesting thoughts based on the topic.

A splendid cornet solo "Sonnet there a Voice is Calling" was played by Mr. W. E. Dale, accompanied by Mrs. S. H. Connor at the piano. This was heartily encored and Mr. Dark played "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes."

Mrs. Claude Bonter gave an excellent talk on "What is Your Contribution to Life." She started with regret the profane and obscene language which can be heard on the streets even from very small children. In referring to sport Mrs. Barnett stated all those who engage in it to play the game in a clean gentlemanly way with no thought of "getting even" with one's opponent for an unfair blow. Discussion of ways of making the community a better place in which to live was entered into by some of the members who suggested that fault finding and criticizing should be avoided.

Mr. Stanley Gabourie teller at the Royal Bank has been transferred of his transfer to Hillsburgh near Guelph to take effect on February 14th when he will report for duty. He will be succeeded by Mr. P. G. Brown of Owen Sound. Mr. Gaboourie or 'Silver' as he is known locally is a general favorite among the younger element and will be missed by them. He has taken an active interest in hockey and lacrosse. He is a member of many men's organizations of St. Carthagh's Roman Catholic Church to which he belongs and will also be greatly missed from these activities as well.

Spite Wife

by Ann Forester

Judy could imagine how the pounding of her fists on the door had awakened hollow echoes to ring through the hall—through the night cellfined. Those guilty two—standing aghast up there—trying to make her think the house was vacant.

Wasting precious moments while death raced down upon them!

Furious panic descending upon her. She pounded on the door, screaming like a wild thing. Redpounding of her fists on the door ing blows on the old-panels, angry and fearful tears pouring down her face, running into her distorted mouth.

"Stan—please! Please . . . so help me God, I'm not trying to trap you! Want to save you! He's coming—Wilson's coming to kill you both. Please—believe me — for Cod's sake, believe me! Eunice . . . I swear it! I swear it's true!"

Boom or surf. A gunshot little brass shaking the flowers. Bringing the smell of rose-geranium and smoke. The door gave a last angry sum and flew sagegoing away from the shock of the mantelpiece. The house drowned in its tangle of sun drenched garden.

With shocked fingers, Judy pulled off a shoe and with its sturdy heel she broke the lower pane of one of the long parlor windows looking out on the porch.

The smashing—falling in as she struck time and again, knocking the frame free until she could reach in her . . . It was a moment before Judy realized that the tear she saw reflection in the depths of a long pierglass.

Hair on end. Face plastered with mud and slimed with tears. Eyes wild. Her dress torn and muddy. Her arm bleeding from a cut she did not remember getting as she scrambled through the window downstairs.

Heart pounding, smothered with fear, she ran through the deserted house. Forcing herself to a systematic search. All the rooms on the ground floor . . . All the lower shadowy parlors downstairs. The dark, red walled kitchen . . . the black coal cellar.

Impossible that this terrifying ghostliness was the lovely old shore house where she and Madame had spent a placid Christmas. The peaceful old place where Stan had discovered he loved her . . .

It was full of danger now . . . . the abode of terror . . .

No one here . . . . The fact was born in on her on a weak wave of relief and disappointment. No one here . . . Had Georgia been deliberately lying? No. There had been real panic in Georgia's confession. . . . Someone had been here—Stan saw it almost immediately after. A clear place on the stair rail, where a hand had rubbed the dust off recently. Other signs. A footstep on the wooden landing of the upper hall. And now that she was retracing her footsteps—searching with less blind terror— Stan's silver pocket flash, forgotten on a dresser in one of the upstairs bedrooms.

The scrambling drive—that desperate trip through the tunnel had been needless. If Wilson got here on his track, Tony was embarrassed but willing.

A strange ride, sitting perched up here beside this fleshy, trunk farmer, sniffing along through the late sunlight. As peace with this fearful day—the black nightmare of that dangerous trip through the tunnel—the strange dream of the empty house filled with dead silence and the hollow roar of the sea.

Judy had lost track of time, when she let them on the bed in the upper bedroom. It might have been minutes, it might have been hours. From the looks of the sun when she rose, finally rest herself, she judged it had been about an hour.

An hour . . . and no one has come. Wilson did not come and he was not coming . . . George had been mistaken or lying . . . Perhaps it was George's accomplice attempt to get Eunice and Stan in trouble with her. . . . But that must have been it, Judy thought—it was George's way of starting a scandal.

Stan and Eunice . . . Sitting there sunk in her own bitter reflections as the hours passed over the road, Judy felt a cold contempt rising in her heart toward the two of them. Stan and Eunice and their unworthy love affair . . . Jealousy was dead within her. She could only whip up disdain.

Stan and Eunice . . . here was her weapon if she cared to use it. Here was the way to whip Stan in his place . . . and Nick . . . Nick . . . She could be free and go to Nick . . .

But she could not. Hard to stir the old warm longing in her heart. Tired . . . she was so tired. Tired, body and soul. Everything in life—even love—even hope—was dust and ashes. Nothing mattered. Life was a matter of sitting perched up here moving nowhere in the dying sunlight.

High up on the ridge road, the road was moving now. Down there was the ocean and the white line of foam along the shore. Over there—hidden by a curve of the hills was a tall house standing asserted by the water. She never wanted to see it again.

She thought of the first time she had come over this road. The dimy height . . . and the way Nick had—caught—held her hand to steady her. Poor little she had thought then, of this day of terror!

She could see the old railway bridge out in the hills which disappeared under a rocky spur. That was the road through which she had crawled—was it only a couple of hours ago?

The track was lumbering over the summit now, its long pale shadow narrowly along with it in the slanting sunshine. Rocky folds of hills, covered with a coarse growth of sage and mesquite, which gave it at a distance, the grey and wrinkled appearance of an elephant's hide.

The road was tortuous —twisting around gullies and shooting, with breath-taking suddenness, out upon the lips of cliffs which plunged down hundreds of feet to rocky canyons below.

Had she been less tired, Judy would have been terror stricken with the height and narrow road. Instead she clutched the back of the seat, to keep from being jolted by the slow moving truck. Her eyes were closed, she slumped wearily in the corner of the seat.

Only when she heard the driver putting on the brakes did she rouse herself.

They had rounded a sharp curve—a man was flagging them to stop. The narrow road was blocked by a low car.

"Hold 'er, fella! We'll be out—here in a few minutes."

"What—is matter? Wreck?" Tony Scatina rather unwillingly asked as he eased his truck to the side of the road.

"Couple—a cars kissed back there. Must've been goin' like hell. Rounded one corner down in the canyon. One's hangin' hot over the edge—they're pullin' 'er up now."

"Anyone hurt?"

"Sure. Kill." The gruesome news was told with relish. "Both drivers—kill right away. An' a girl in one car was bounced out an' hurt pretty bad. They took 'em all away to the hospital, but the guys was dead—as doornails."

The informer spat, his eyes talking in with curiosity, the dust covered, whitefaced girl perched up on the truck.

"Say, the way son've these guys drive they should get bounced off the edge! You got relation's a-ridin' over this grade day after day. An'—tryin' think to fool!" Tony Scatina, climbing down as he gave vent to this righteous indignation. "They come around these curves like nobody's business—I've seen 'em miss crashin' by inches!"

He walked down to the little group of men around the tow car.

Shouted directions — the dreadful strain of machinery and cables taxed . . . a car . . . battered radiator— crumpled fender, battered top, headlights gone—up over the lip of the road. An expensive roadster sun and brown —a special paint job. A car which looked appallingly familiar. Stan's car!

This last strain after the terror and weariness of the day was too much. When Tony returned to the truck, he gave a groan of excitement.

"Say . . . you guys com'mer? The lady's fainted!"

Judy learned the details of Jo later. Much later . . . .

Her own city, quiet little apartment in the city. Judy, thin and weak, lying under the eyes of Miquilli, her face as white as the pillow she lay against.

Mary Lockerbee, sitting beside the bed. Dependable Mary, who had been hurrying up to the city to Judy as soon as the shocking news had been flashed to the Lockwood Inn.

Mary had listened aghast to Judy's story of Georgia's threats—of that terrifying trip down the coast to warn Stan. Now Mary offered her sympathy and her practical.

Eunice talked, after she recovered consciousness in the hospital. They were driving back to the city when the crash came. "I don't know how Stan drives! There's little traffic—and he was driving like the devil, you know. And I suppose they were swinging around curves regardless. And Wilson— coming like a fiend from the other direction. Couldn't even know it was Wilson's car, it came so quickly—just a car suddenly flashing out from behind a curve and then a crash. She says all she remembers is a shout from Stan, then a flash of blinding light and blackness. She was flung from the window as it fell over the edge. Thrown into a clump of mesquite. Her arm broken, fractured— and a broken arm will keep her fist for a few months. Poor devil . . . I have no use for her, but I wouldn't wish that on my worst enemy . . .

Mary paused and took a vigorous pull on her cigarette. Her eyes were turned away from the haunting ravages of the girl on the bed. Her voice was very gentle when she finally went on.

"Stan and Wilson never had a chance, of course. The driver seldom has—pinned in by the wheel . . . Instantaneous—at least that's a mercy. Wilson was unconscious when they picked him up, but he died on the way to the hospital. Ironic—isn't it—that it should be Wilson's car. . . . And no one will ever know if he recognized Eunice in Stan's car . . . The mill of the gods, Judy! Or grinds slow, but exceeding small!"

PICKING UP THE PIECES

CHAPTER SEVENTY-FIVE

The services for Stan . . . . .

It was like a bad dream, returning to Lockwood for this sorrowful duty. Like a dream through which Judy moved and spoke like one under a narcotic.

Dry eyed, she who had cried so much in her short married life! She who would burst into tears when she was angry or agitated. Moving through the days, through a stony white face and anguished eyes.

Detached incidents remained with her afterward. The half-remembered dream. Mrs. Carter, suddenly self-contained and efficient and flattering old woman, far older, at seemed to Judy, than Madame had ever been.

Yes, for once shorn of her managing ways. Yes, putting her arms around Judy and saying through a trembling lips: "Oh, Judy, isn't this dreadful . . . . "

All differences and resentment had been wiped away by the tragedy. Judy was, for once in her life, fully and completely . . . She had Stan's wife . . . she was a Carter.

Yes, Judy was sorrowful, as Judy had never seen her. The hard metallic finish of her was dimmed. Her lipstick had smeared on her grief-torn mouth, her mascara had run with tears.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating breakfast and me said, Now what was it I wanted to remember? Long life, I know that was the password I was supposed to remember by it? Long life, long life, she said.

Oh, I remember now, pop said, Jy gollies I have it you cane have a long life without being a long liver, and that's what you were thinking of, having a big whooping galaxy of liver and onions for supper tonite, he said, and ma said, Dont be silly, we had liver and onions yestiddey.

Yestiddey, pop said, Well what of it? Another sun will have risen and set since yestiddey by the time Nora rings out the merry tidings for liver and onions tonite, he said, and ma said, Now Willyum how can I keep my mind on what I'm trying to remember if you keep drawing a herring of liver and onions on the table? Long life, she said.

And health and happiness pop said. What has a longer life than onions? You eat them, and yet the recipe lingers on. You must of been thinking of liver and onions, he said. Speaking of long livers, I was reeding ony the other day that the Rumanian peasants live to be 100 and I attribute their old on a diet of liver and onions and wine and beer and milk and prunes or something. I'll be satisfied to take a few years less and skip the yoo-goo, he said, and ma said, I remember, Sunburst Polish, they claim it will prolong the life of furniture indefinitely, if not for years, and Willyum said, Nix it is the only place you can get it and I want you to bring me home a can, Willyum, she said.

On one consideration and that is, pop said, that you have a new stick of furniture indefinitely, if not for years, pop said, and ma said Now Willyum dont start reeding.

Furniture being her biggest weakness, and pop said, All rite, I'll compromise on the furniture if you compromise on the liver and onions, and pop said, All rite, I will you'll have it before the end of the week, what's mine is yours.

Meaning pop, with he did.

TARZAN THE UNTAMED

(Metropolitan Newspaper Feature Service, Inc.)

By Edgar Rice Burroughs

Olga, the spy, had known many sorts of men, and she was nobody's fool. To save herself she never hesitated to kill. Tarzan was now a few paces ahead of her as the trail narrowed. That locket—she must have it back; it was her passport—into Wilhelmstal. Cautiously she drew her pistol. A single shot would do the work; he was so close she could not miss. As she figured it all out, her eyes rested on the man's brown skin with the graceful muscles rolling beneath.

Ever sensitive to Nature's masterpieces, she saw the perfect limbs and head and the carriage that a proud king of old might have envied. Suddenly she recoiled from her contemplated act.

No, she could not do it—yet she must be free, and she must regain the locket. And then almost blindly, she swung her weapon up and struck Tarzan heavily upon the back of the head with the butt.

FIGHT TO SAVE NUDISM FOR N.Y.

Determined battle is being waged by advocates of nudism for the right to practise their tenets in the privacy of their spring retreats, in New York legislature, which is considering McCall-Dooling bill to outlaw meetings of three or more unclothed persons or both sexes. Photos show Mrs. Morris Ryskind, of National Council of Freedom from Censorship, and Alfred W. Flynn, of Sun Bathers' League, making appeal in behalf of nudism and typical scene shown in the nudist camp at Newpoils, N. Y., last summer.

TECS AGAIN ON TOP

(By The Canadian Press)

Frank Nighbor's London Tecumsehs are again on the top spot of the International Hockey League in the place they vacated just a week ago.

The Tecs 4-1 victory over Cleveland last night carried them out of a second place tie with Buffalo Bisons for second place and into a tie for the lead with Detroit Olympics.

Detroit lost a chance to retain sole leadership by playing a 3-3 draw with Buffalo Bisons. A win would have put the Herd at the head of the league also but they have another chance to even up with London and Detroit when they meet Windsor Saturday night. Both Detroit and London are idle over the week end.

PRINTERS WANT CLAUSE MADE LAW

Also Request Change in Liquor Advertising For Ontario

Toronto, Feb. 8.—(CP)—When the Industrial Standards Act, which Hon. A. W. Roebuck, Ontario Attorney General and Minister of Labor, proposes to introduce at the forthcoming session of the Provincial Legislature comes into force the government will not make the agreements for employers and employees.

These agreements must be drawn up by those involved and then the government will give them legal force, Mr. Roebuck declared yesterday, when questioned by a delegation from the Joint Council of Printing Trades of Toronto and Hamilton.

The deputation asked for a change in the government's attitude towards liquor advertising in Ontario because they claimed many publications have been transferred to Quebec so liquor advertisements could be inserted.

If the government believes liquor advertising has an immoral effect on the people of Ontario, they urged in a resolution, let it be placed in the same category as obscene literature and be excluded entirely from Ontario.

The deputation was told, however, the Ontario government has no control over banning obscene literature but this is a matter for the Federal authorities.

Another request in the brief the deputation presented the ministers asked the "Fair Wage" clause pertaining to provincial contracts be made a law instead of a resolution as at present.

Also, the deputation asked the government to take steps to prevent any Department of Education printing being let to printing firms not abiding by the "fair wage" clause.

FAIRCHILD ASKS TRIAL BY JURY

Montrealer Denies 'Take' Stock Transaction Charge

Montreal, Feb. 8 (CP)—Alleged "Take" stock transactions through which the public was mulcted of almost $1,000,000 were described when Clarence A. Fairchild, Montreal, was arraigned before Judge Maurice Tetreau on a charge of conspiracy to defraud. Police are searching for Clarence Francis Potter on similar charges.

Fairchild pleaded not guilty to the charge and elected trial by jury. He was held without bail for preliminary hearing.

The charge against Fairchild mentioned "an amount over $200,000" but Gerard Pauteut, Crown prosecutor, stated the investigation being continued into the affairs of Fairchild and the Sakoos Mine Company, Limited, have revealed to date that the public has been defrauded of close to $1,000,000.

In no uncertain terms, declaring Seiter was "railroaded," that they themselves received no protection from either crown or defence, and that they deserved to be framed if they stayed in London to testify.

ATTORNEY TELLS PART IN CONTRACT

Said it Was Unfair And That Mother Had Not Signed

Erie, Pa., Feb. 9.—(AP)—A. Grant Walker, Erie attorney who drew a joint defendant with Oliva and Elsie Dionne, parents of the Canadian quintuplets in a $1,000,000 breach of contract suit in Chicago, said he acted merely as a "go-between" for legal advice given the couple.

Walker was in Calander on a fishing trip at the time the babies were born.

Without legal representation Mr. Dionne signed a contract with Dran T. Spear in Chicago on March 17, 1934, at the World's Fair, provided physicians agreed to it, testified Mr. Walker.

"A little later the father sought my assistance, knowing I was an Attorney. I thought the contract unfair because it provided Spear was to receive 70 per cent. of the profits, photographic rights."

Walker said he told the father he need not abide by the document as his wife had not signed and the children couldn't appear without her. He added he explained Spear the same night the contract was not binding and the quintuplets would not appear.

EIGHT HOUR DAY 48 HOUR WEEK FOR INDUSTRY

House Ratifies International Convention on Subject

BATTLE OF PRECEDENTS

Premier and Guthrie Are Pitted Against King and Lapointe

Ottawa, Feb. 9 (CP)—Four eminent constitutional authorities waged a battle of precedents in the House of Commons yesterday although all were agreed upon the immediate question, before them—which finally was passed—the ratification of an international convention respecting an eight-hour day and 48-hour week in industry. The issue was raised as to whether ratification of this convention would provide constitutional basis for a Bill the government proposes to pass through parliament and generally for Prime Minister R. B. Bennett's reform programme.

On the government side Mr. Bennett and Hon. Hugh Guthrie, Minister of Justice, were the protagonists of international treaties as a method of giving validity to social legislation, which otherwise might be outside jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. On the opposite side Rt. Hon W. L. Mackenzie King, Liberal Leader, and Hon. Ernest Lapointe, former Minister of Justice, contended the method was a poor one and the government should proceed by obtaining an amendment to the constitution or at least secure an opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada.

Man Whose Heart Had Stopped Saw Neighbors in Other World

"Smiling Faces in Bank of Hazy Shining Clouds" He Says

MEDICAL VIEWS

Arley, Eng., Feb. 9 (AP)—While market gardener John Puckering looked at death through rose-colored glasses today and regretted the world-to-come had gone again, the British Medical Journal described the sensations he had during Puckering's four and a half minute departure from "life".

Puckering is convinced he died on the operating table because: "I saw many villagers from Arley. I knew them before they died. They were all happy and I was happy too". He painted a rosy picture of "smiling faces in a bank of hazy shining clouds".

He underwent a serious abdominal operation. The Medical Journal declared all those present in the operating theatre believed the patient was dead. Dr. G. Percival Mills said: "I slipped my hand under his diaphragm and found his heart had stopped. I could feel what appeared to be an empty, flabby heart without a flicker of pulsation. The head had of course already been lowered and artificial respiration started."

The heart was massaged and adrenalin injected directly into the ventricle. An physician related, causing "a faint flicker in the flabby organ; I was compressing."

The surgeon hurriedly completed the operation as the heart beat vigorously once more.

The "slime table" for the operation, is told by the British Medical Journal, stated, in part:

"At 21 minutes there was no pulse anywhere; a stopped heart was felt through the diaphragm. Heart massage was begun. At 34 minutes adrenalin was injected into the heart. At 45 minutes the heart started beating. At 45 minutes the operation was ended. At 60 minutes there was a fair breathing movement.

"At 2 hours there were the first voluntary movements. From the fourth to sixth days the patient was very noisy and getting out of bed. In the third week he was discharged, cured."

HANDS ARE FROZEN TO SKIFF'S OARS

75 Year Geo. Casselman Suffers While Taking Fogd to Son

Sturgeon Falls, Ont. Feb. 9 (CP) — His hands frozen to the oars of the 16-foot skiff, 75-year-old George Casselman rowed for three days on the treacherous waters of Lake Nipissing to transport provisions to his son. Exhausted by the hazardous three-day trip, the old man now rests at his home here, apparently no worse for his experience.

When Mr. Casselman started off to take supplies to his son, he did not think it would take him to reach Tomlison's camp, on the north shore of Lake Nipissing, 18 miles from the mouth of the Sturgeon River. But weather conditions were not favorable as he suffered great hardships before he reached the camp, where his son was stationed.

When dogs continued to bark on the bush nearby, rushed back to his camp. There near the stove he found his aged father, slumped in the rear boat, his hands frozen to the oars.

He was scarcely able to speak—he was exhausted. Others had soaked the provisions—but after a rest at the camp, his recovery was amazing.

'SETH PARKER' IN DANGER IN WATERS NORTH OF TAHITI

British Warship Hurrying To Aid of The Steamer

BOAT TAKES WATER

Expect Change of Wind Will Take Centre of Storm Away

San Francisco, Feb. 9 (AP)—Bordreaded radio messages that the four masted schooner Seth Parker was in great danger and taking solid walls of water Over her side sent a British warship hurrying to her aid in the South Seas early today.

In fear of capsizing, the schooner carrying Phillips Lord, an entertainer and a crew of approximately 15 men, began sailing under bare mast last night when she was 300 miles from Tahiti.

About midnight Pacific Standard Time, she radioed:

"Another bad squall just hit us and we took solid water over the side for the first time".

Three hours later the Marconi branch of contract operator Sparkman was still taking water over her side.

H.M.S. Australia, variously reported 100 and 300 miles away and speeding at 24 knots to the aid of the schooner, informed the Seth Parker a typhonic depression appears to be to the westward of you and probably will pass southward. Now wind has veered, weather should improve."

The Seth Parker promptly replied, "barometer falling again."

Expect Change in Storm

Its owners apparently expected the change in wind direction as the following message during the night, the Seth Parker did not report any damage to her and the passengers said she was afraid to put around to ride out of the storm because of the "extreme danger" of capsizing. Lord told of repeated squalls pounding high, seas against the ship, and a wind of almost gale force.

He was aboard the vessel as the general vicinity of the schooner, in the steamers Niagara and Toronto, both 600 miles away, and H.M.S. Australia prepared to fair weather.

However, both Tutila and the Niagara reported the barometer was dropping.

Messages received here did not indicate whether the Niagara and the Toronto were proceeding to the side of the Seth Parker.

LICENCE PLATES FOR LIFE OF CAR ADVOCATED

London, Feb. 9—(CP)—A new system of motor car registration, by which licence plates would last the rush for licenses and also save considerable money for the government, was advocated today by Mayor William Veitch.

Mr. Veitch's idea is that with each motor car sold in Ontario there should be issued a set of plates good for the life of the car. The purchaser would pay the annual fee, three-day trip, the old man pow- three-day trip, the old man pow- rests at his home here, apparently no worse for his experience.

MRS. D.L. MORROW CALLED TO REBUT DEFENCE EVIDENCE

Mrs. Lindbergh Accompanies Mother to Flemington Courtroom

STATE TROOPER CALLED

Nick Marks on Wood by Planes Subject of Questions

By WILLIAM A. KINNEY

(Copyright 1935, By The Associated Press)

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 9—Anne Morrow Lindbergh came back to court today with her mother, Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, who was called as a rebuttal witness for the State in the trial of Bruno Richard Hauptmann. It was the first appearance of the bereaved young mother since she testified on the second day of the trial.

The State was determined to try and prove neither Isador Fisch, Hauptmann's dead business associate, nor Violet Sharpe, the suicide maid, had the remotest connection with the crime, as the defence claims.

Mrs. Morrow, grandmother of the murdered child, and associates of Miss Sharpe were ready to give a complete account of the whereabouts of the maid on March 1, 1932.

The prosecution bent its efforts to show Fisch was not, as a defence witness testified, in Mr. Lindbergh's cemetery on April 2, 1922, when the $50,000 ransom was paid.

Expect Change in Story

Louis Bornzman, New Jersey State trooper, took the stand to rebut defence witnesses, whose testimony was offered to cast doubt upon the State's ladder evidence against Hauptmann.

He told how he obtained the attic floor board in Hauptmann's home. It is from this board the State contends one of the ladder uprights was cut.

Q—Did you get possession of the nails in that board?

A—I pulled the board up, broke it off and a police carpenter removed the nails with a pair of pincers.

Q—And you then took possession of the nails?

The following news item is contained in the February 8 issue of the Hamilton Spectator:

PROTECTION URGED AT HOUSE REFUGE

Report of Fire Marshal Says Changes Much Needed

Inadequate facilities for escape from the building in the event of fire are clearly pointed out by the office of the Ontario Fire Marshal in a report received on the Hastings County House of Refuge following a tour of inspection of the local institution by ? spectors of the department some time ago.

"The fire escapes are totally inadequate for the institution of this type. The doors to the escapes open inwards against the exit flow of people. The doors are too steep. The foot of the fire escapes terminates in the air part of this building which have around them a two foot railing which is dangerous. Persons have to climb over, and then there is a drop of eight feet to the ground. The fire escapes on the building down", is one paragraph contained in the report received by County Clerk Eric Denyes yesterday.

Other immediate installation of wired-glass partitions and construction of fire escapes at suitable points of egress from the building are also urged by the department. County Council will be asked to make estimates of providing a 6-inch water main to the House this year or next year. As a second alternative the department should also be dug capable of holding 50,000 imperial gallons of water from which water may be pumped by the Fire Department in the event of fire.

One fire escape should be erected on the north side of the building from the top of floor to the ground level, the report states, and another 22 inches in the clear, it was recommended.

"Smoke danger is the greatest menace to an institution of this type", the report states, according to the report, only one fairly safe exit from the top floor and the basement owing his success to the knowledge pumped into him by the Fire Marshals staff.

A strong Conservative by birth and conviction, he played no mean part in the politics of Carleton. He was the Conservative candidate for Carleton in the Whitney victory campaign in 1908 and in the Borden victory of 1911. During the war he did splendid work in compiling the lists and records divisions of the Auditor-General's department, being given the rank of captain. He was a member of thousands of soldiers' files dumped at Ottawa were reduced to order by Captain Carstairs.

In later years he had been associated with the Ontario Archives, where his services were of immense value, but was relieved of his office by the Hepburn government.

Captain Carstairs was principal of Stirling High School from 1895 to 1900 and while in that town he married Miss Maude Gilbert. He left for Toronto where he joined the staff of Harbord Collegiate, and later some years he assumed the principalship, and for a time was also teaching at Harbord.

Before coming to Stirling he had been a reporter and correspondent for a Toronto paper and at one time he owned the Napanee Beaver Iroquois. Ont.

Friends in Hastings County speak of his encyclopedic knowledge and of his many fine qualities of mind and heart.

He was a member of the Masonic Order and the I.O.O.F.

JOHN CARSTAIRS WAS HISTORIAN

Former Principal of Stirling School Dies at Seventy

By the death in Toronto yesterday of Captain John Fraser Carstairs, M.B.E., there was removed a man who was a walking encyclopedia of the history of Upper Canada, and more particularly the Loyalist section of this province were an open book to him, and he took pride in telling about their history and dwelling upon the part that the Loyalists had played in the development of Canada. He was one of the founders of the United Empire Loyalists' Association of Toronto, had held many of the leading offices, including that of president and would, had he lived, have been the Dominion president for the current year. As an authority on the Loyalist movement he was unequalled. His library, containing some 3,000 volumes, was one of the best in Canada as regards history. He was also a leading member of the Ontario Historical Society, having been treasurer for many years, and was always actively in evidence at the annual meetings.

Born at Kingston, he may be began teaching in Dundas County in his early manhood, working his way up to the head of his profession, among his posts having been that of teacher of history and classics at Harbord Collegiate. His best work was done in his private coaching, many a man who later occupied seats in the legislature and government owing his success to the knowledge pumped into him by Captain Carstairs.

A strong Conservative by birth and conviction, he played no mean part in the politics of Carleton. He was the Conservative candidate for Carleton in the Whitney victory campaign in 1908 and in the Borden victory of 1911. During the war he did splendid work in compiling the lists and records divisions of the Auditor-General's department, being given the rank of captain. Thousands upon thousands of soldiers' files dumped at Ottawa were reduced to order by Captain Carstairs.

In later years he had been associated with the Ontario Archives, where his services were of immense value, but was relieved of his office by the Hepburn government.

Captain Carstairs was principal of Stirling High School from 1895 to 1900 and while in that town he married Miss Maude Gilbert. He left for Toronto where he joined the staff of Harbord Collegiate, and later some years he assumed the principalship, and for a time was also teaching at Harbord.

Before coming to Stirling he had been a reporter and correspondent for a Toronto paper and at one time he owned the Napanee Beaver Iroquois. Ont.

Friends in Hastings County speak of his encyclopedic knowledge and of his many fine qualities of mind and heart.

He was a member of the Masonic Order and the I.O.O.F.

A member of the Church of St. Jude, Ronnesvalles Avenue, his funeral service will be conducted at his late residence, 60 Hazelwood Avenue, Toronto, by Rev. R. J. Shires, on Sunday at 3 p.m., after which the body will be taken to Stirling, where it will be buried in the spring in the family plot.

Police News

An average of ten transients per night have slumbered in the cell sheet at the local police station thus far this month, eight having been registered in the transient book up to midnight last night. Last evening, however, the number of transients to apply for a night's lodging was slightly in excess to the average, when fourteen were afforded warm sleeping quarters.

Reposing in the police station this morning was seen a bottle that was found abandoned at the upper end of Front Street early today while the police were going over their beat.

No arrests were necessary in the city during the past 24 hours, making a 48 hour period in the city without a single arrest being reported, or a major motor accident happening, despite the hazardous driving qualities owing to icy pavements covered with last night's light fall of snow.

Scientist Discovers Serum To Counteract Fatal Bite Of Most Deadly of Spiders

Dr. Fred D'Amour of Denver ssa racting poisonous venom from black-wido w spider.

By CENTRAL PRESS CANADIAN

Denver, Col., Feb. 9— What is believed to be the first highly potent, anti-venom serum against the bite of the deadly black-widow spider has recently been perfected by Dr. Fred D'Amour of the University of Denver.

The importance of Dr. D'Amour's discovery comes at a propitious time for with last year's drouth throughout many western states these death-dealing spiders became numerous.

This, combined with the fact that the black widow spider's venom is more poisonous—weight for weight —than rattlesnake venom, makes the spider a greater menace than the rattler. For the rattler is seldom, if ever, found in thickly populated regions. Then, too, the rattler warns his victims, while it is more than the lurking spider does.

He Identifies Name

Scientists call this spider Latrodectus mactans. It is a large, shiny jet-black spider with a bulbous-like abdomen. Its long slender legs cover a span of two inches or more.

"The trio danger from the black widow spider is not prompted by the spider's viciousness", Dr. D'Amour says." "In fact, these spiders are timid and retiring. The danger lies in one approaching these poisonous animals unaware. "For instance, several cases have been reported lately, where the victim was bitten in bed, the spider having fallen from —the bedroom ceiling to the bed. Upon rolling over on the spider the person was bitten. Several such bites have proved fatal.

"Dozens of people have been bitten by these spiders while picking grapes, tomatoes, etc. The harvester, unwittingly clutched a spider while picking grapes from the vine. The moment the hand contacted the frightened spider, the latter sank his poison fangs into the flesh.

How Poison Spreads

The bite is not painful, and faint marks often disappear before the resulting pain is felt.

Dr. D'Amour explains:

"Within an hour or so after the bite, the victim is seized with intense pain and suffering. An almost unbearable pain ascends the extremity bitten, and localizes in the abdomen muscles, as well as in the back and chest. Spasms and untold suffering follow. The abdominal muscles become board-like in their rigidity, and the chest muscles contract so violently that it is difficult for the victim to breathe.

"The brain is affected, and the victim may lie in a deep stupor for hours. Nausea and vomiting also are common. If death does not follow these attacks, the victim may be weeks in recovering.

Dr. D'Amour's discovery may be worth thousands of dollars to the cattle growers world alone, for many cases have been reported throughout the west where entire vineyards have been abandoned because they were overrun with black widow spiders.

STOP DEPLETION OF SOIL FIBRE

Bare Summer-Fallowing is Condemned by Engineers

TORONTO, Feb. 9.—(CP)— Reforestation, drought and widespread calamity in the Canadian West can be prevented only if farmers stop bare summer-fallowing and the repeated cultivation which depletes the soil's nutritive fibre and humus, were the conclusions by prominent Dominion foresters attending the 46th annual convention of the Engineering Institute of Canada. A systematic scheme of planting shelter belts of trees and hedges and conservation of water by a series of great dams was urged.

By damming the South Branch of the Saskatchewan River flowing through one of the principal drought areas, a gigantic reservoir 300 billion cubic feet could be established, said Walter Blue, manager of development for the Gatineau Power Company. "This would be enough to irrigate 800,000 acres of land each year, at the rate of three feet per acre, and would greatly increase the flow of the river," said Mr. Blue.

Similar storage schemes can be built on the North Saskatchewan River, the Red Deer River and other tributary streams, delegates stated.

CO-EDS RESENT SMOKING CHARGE

Believe Girls Should Have Same Privilege as Men

London, Ont., Feb. 9 (CP)—Co-eds of the University of Western Ontario are indignant at having been singled out for attack on the question of smoking by members of the Students' Council and Trustees Association. The co-eds were criticized for establishing a separate smoking room last fall.

In a leading editorial, the University Gazette it is pointed out the girls do not mind the trustees discriminating between men who smoke when they engage teachers for their schools but they want to know why any difference is made between men who smoke and girls who smoke.

Vallee's Income Is Established

New York, Feb. 9.—(AP)— The illness of Mrs. Fay Webb Vallee on Thursday caused her counsel to rest his case against her estranged husband, Rudy Vallee.

The surprise move came after Accountants established the net income of Vallee, both personal and corporate, at $120,000 to $123,000 annually during the years 1932, 1933 and 1934.

"If Rudy should die today," exclaimed Vallee's attorney, Hyman Bushel, his voice faltering, "he would have to pay $60,000 to $80,000 in taxes to the Government."

Thomas I. Sheridan, counsel for Mrs. Vallee, seeking more maintenance money, expressed profound solicitude for Vallee.

"We don't want him to die today," Sheridan said.

PARIS MAKES VIGOROUS PREPARATION FOR GAS ATTACK

For some months the French defence ministry has supervised secret preparations against aerial gas attacks of the future. Some of the apparatus was given a public demonstration recently, much to the interest of the populace and the entire world. Featured in the gas defence plans are huge metal shelters, which are designed for placing at strategic spots over the city. By using these transportable shelters, rescue workers armed with gas masks forage out and bring in those overcome by smoke. Each shelter can accommodate five persons for an indefinite period. Each is equipped to bring gassed persons back to consciousness. These are the first pictures to be made of this new feature of protection against the "war of the future". At left, rescue workers emerge from the transportable shelter, seeking "victims" of a gas attack. Their suits and masks are airtight. Right, a doctor watching the ai rpressure in the transportable shelter, as a nurse pumps purified air into the metal "dugout."

Parliament Hill Hears

(By WILFRID EGGLESTON)

On one of the days when the Liberal leader had been holding forth in considerable length, and with much power and eloquence, a Liberal Senator happened to encounter in the corridor a member from the "youth seat" or Independent corner of the House, and with him his little boy.

"Sing was great today," remarked the Senator. "He positively dominated the House."

The Independent member made some appreciative remark. The Senator turned to the little boy, impressively;

"Sonny," he said, "who is the greatest member in the House of Commons?"

The little fellow had an answer ready, in spite of the awesomeness of the Senator.

"My Daddy," he announced shyly. "Ah yes,—— country," said the Senator. "Very good. Well, after your Daddy, who's next?

But the little fellow failed to give the expected answer.

"Mr. Woodsworth," he said.

Here is a 'Mother-in-Law' joke a little different from the Mill- Run. One of the members from the far west happened to be in Montreal, when he was approached by a stranger.

"You're Mr. So-and-so—and the member of parliament?" asked the man asked. The member admitted his identity.

"I want to tell you a little story," continued the stranger. "At Christmas time I got a little present from my wife's mother, in Sweden. It was a cigarette lighter. It wasn't very expensive. In fact it had cost only 60 ore—about 3 cents."

"Not a very extravagant gift," commenting the member, wondering why on earth he was being confided in. "But still, on account of the sentiment, you would appreciate it just the same."

"Yes," said the stranger. "But that's not what I'm getting at. I was notified by the Customs authorities that this Christmas present was waiting for me. I went down and got it; and how much duty do you suppose I had to pay?"

"I haven't any idea," replied the member.

"One dollar and eighty-nine cents," said the stranger. "Now you're a member. Can't you do something about that sort of thing?"

The late Hon. A. L. Sifton was a most laconic man, frugal with words and paper, according to his grim little incident told about him. As Minister of Justice it was his duty to review capital cases and make a recommendation concerning commutation when the judge had sentenced to die. On one occasion the official of the department received from the Minister's office a file concerning a man who had been sentenced to die in a few days; and contrary to custom there seemed to be no recommendation attached. However, after considerable searching over the file, they found, in Sifton's small neat writing, almost invisible on the corner of page one the following:

"Hang him. ALS."

Miss Agnes Macphail, M.P., has recently returned from a visit to Louisiana, where she saw camellias and azaleas blooming "wild for the first time in her life, and where she was amazed at the things being done by Huey Long. She came back with a very different idea of that dictator than casual readers are entertaining through their newspaper and magazine reading.

Miss Macphail says Huey is a man of tremendous energy, who only sleeps only three or four hours a day, and is driven by the accused.

night; is a very clever jurist; acts the clown deliberately; is getting things done; is redistributing wealth in Louisiana in a very desirable way; represents the wishes of the people better than the old forms of democracy did; is either loved intensely or hated intensely; is loyally supported by students and professors at the State University; will, in Miss Macphail's opinion, make a great run for the presidency of the United States some day. He is, she adds, a demagog and has no comprehensive understanding of economics, but he is a good, campaigner and his "share the wealth" slogan will carry him a long way.

Miss Macphail asked a veteran member of the Louisiana State Legislature and also of Congress, what she thought of Huey. She found him wearing a gold fish ornament on his lapel—the fish being symbol of Huey. She asked him whether Huey was interested in the condition of the masses or in power for himself, and he answered at once; "In the masses".

"But", Miss Macphail said: "his methods are reprehensible."

To which the member replied: "He fights the devil with fire. He gets results."

Those who new Sir Robert, Borden best in his campaigning days say that his speeches were solid and forceful, but not humorous or sprinkled with anecdote. It would however, be wrong to say that he never told stories. It happened to mention this characteristic of Borden's to John Angus MacMillan, the well-known Conservative leader who immediately recalled an anecdote which the then Conservative leader had told on a western campaign about 25 years ago. John Angus could remember it. It has a rather modern ring too, as though he were telling it on his inflationist views of day.

Sir Robert said that a certain man had an excellent butler, with only one fault: he threw the dishes around rather violently. He pointed out so bad the man wondered what to do. In his predicament he asked three of his friends, one an Englishman, one a Scotsman and one an Irishman.

The Englishman, approaching the problem from a blunt, practical viewpoint, said: "Discharge him".

The Scotsman carefully suggested: "Take the cost of the dishes out of his wages."

"The trouble is," remarked the man, "That the value of the dishes comes to more than his wages."

"Raise his wages," was the brilliant solution of the Irishman.

Some of the "retorts courteous" in the House are happily omitted from Hansard, although they are plainly heard from the Press Gallery, and must fall with even more sparkle on the ears of the Hansard reporters. Such a one occurred last week, during a debate in which a member complained that the net receipts to a farmer for five cows was $4.79.

At this point a member on the opposite side, especially noted for his avoirdupois interrupted.

The farmer would get more than that for you," retorted some member whose identity, is fortunately, lost in oblivion.

A Dog's Best Friend . . . . .

Hudson, Ont., Feb. 9—When a dog saves the life of a man it is always news, but when a man risks his life for his canine friend that borders on the extraordinary. But young Donald Starratt of this town has been recommended to the Manitoba headquarters of the Boy Scouts for a medal for his bravery.

Donald and his five-months-old pup, Rex, were standing on the station platform watching an express approaching fast freight. The train was almost in front of the station when Donald was horrified to see his pet cowering between the rails, petrified with fear, as the train bore down upon him.

Without a moment's hesitation the youth flung himself on the fear-crazed dog and dragged him to safety as the train thundered by.

"Maybe he'll do the same for me some day," said Starratt, after he got his breath. "Anyway, the first thing I'm going to do is buy him a chain and collar. I'm going to tie him up when I go down to the tracks."

FISCH'S SISTER KNEW NO ESTATE IN N. AMERICA

Attorney-General David T. Wilentz helped speed the trial toward its end by im ediately calling his rebuttal witnesses. Quickly he sought to bring out refutations of defence testimony following a series of witnesses by Henna Fisch, sister of the little German furrier, Isador Fisch, whom the defence had sought to implicate in the kidnapping.

The State's rebuttal is expected to be finished today, to which event the summation of by prosecution and defence, and the court's charge to the jury is likely to send the jury to its deliberations some time late Tuesday or Wednesday next week. Only sur-rebuttal testimony remains to help Hauptmann.

The weather Friday was murky and Hauptmann appeared in his chair as the closing drew near.

When the words "defence rests" were spoken the German prisoner blew his nose nervously; his wife, Anna, sat motionless.

An alibi for Fisch's presence at a home in the Bronx the night of the kidnapping was furnished in the rebuttal by two friends of Fisch and a local estate man. A former New Jersey farmer also disputed testimony of a woman defence witness that he had accompanied Fisch back in 1933 to her home in Long Island in an attempt to dispose of some mysterious "bundles".

Miss Hannah Fisch spoke in German, testifying through Professor George Sylvester Friet of Princeton University, who was sworn as an interpreter. When Edward J. Reilly, chief of the defense staff, took her for cross-examination, he addressed her in German, asking her if she understood English and she answered in German that she could not.

Miss Fisch testified she met her brother at the Leipzig railroad station, and that he brought one bag with him, another coming by express.

The dark-haired German fraulein said she helped her brother unpack the baggage because he was "weak", and that he had brought with him "two suits of clothes, a blue and a gray suit, six shirts, a woollen shawl, two pairs of shoes, a pair of house shoes or slippers, a few cravats already made up." She said everything that was in the bags, she swore.

Fisch stayed at her home until he went to the hospital in March, 1934, where he died after two days. He had, she said, about 1,500 marks, or about $600, in notes and coins when he arrived.

On cross-examination, Reilly asked her if the Fisch family had asked a New York lawyer to handle Fischle's estate, and whether they had submitted to him "the following: Bills and notes . . . Shares, stocks, a restaurant company, and a bundle that was hidden?"

"No, we did not," she answered.

"Did you put in a claim for a $20,000 estate?"

"No, I did not know what Isador had in Amerika," she said.

She said she had burned papers which were notations of money he lent home, "$10 here and $15 there, a little over $1,000 altogether in a six-year period." She testified "I send him money," she said.

The State rested its rebuttal witnesses to the stand in an atmosphere charged with tenseness. Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh, who had missed none of the 28 court sessions in the case, and Mrs. Lindbergh, listened attentively to every word, craning his neck to get a better view of the prisoner at the stand.

Joseph Levenson, a Bronx real estate man, who knew Fisch and Hauptmann, furnished alibis for Fisch on the night of the kidnapping. Levenson swore he went to the Jung home for a business deal that night and came to the Fisch home at a late hour. Mrs. Jung said Fisch came to her home "around eight" and that he stayed until nearly midnight. Her testimony was corroborated by her husband Arthur. The promissory notes made at the home that night, Reilly further to eliminate Fisch from the case, the State called Ida Former Landlord Mrs. Selma Kahl, who indicated that the furrier was not only a frugal soul, but had little money. She rented the smallest room" in her house, she said, paying $5 a week for it.

Major-General John F. O'Ryan, Police Commissioner of New York City when Hauptmann was arrested in September, 1934, was sworn and told where the German cash had been found in Hauptmann's garage before Hauptmann explained to him where it would be found. Reilly's attempt to have his testimony stricken was denied.

William Koncicko, a former New Jersey State policeman, testified to today's testimony. He testified he had brought Lou Harding, a Prince ton student, to the Lindbergh estate the day after the kidnapping and said Harding had told him that what he testified for the defence, that he had seen Fisch with two men and a ladder in it near the estate the day of the crime.

Reilly announced adjournment, to resume in the morning in the first Saturday session of the trial, prosecution attorneys said they hoped to finish with rebuttal witnesses by noon.

One of the State's attorneys said Mrs. Dwight W. Morrow, mother of Mrs. Lindbergh, would be called as a witness in the case of Violet Sharpe, but that neither Lindbergh nor Mrs. Lindbergh would be called.

NEW SILVER DOLLARS

Canadians will soon be rubbing silver dollars against one another in their pockets and in their purses.

The advent of the silver dollar is to be tried. Will the new coin be popular or will it be too heavy in the pocket or purse?

This is giving the silver mines a little chance and the people something new.

One thing is certain—it will be easier to tell a silver dollar in the pocket by the feel of its measurements and weight, than it is to decide on a bill in the pocket whether it is a one or a two or a five or a ten dollar bill, though some persons claim to be able to detect the difference of the bills by sense of touch alone.

NO AMNESTY

British prisoners in penal institutions will celebrate the anniversary of the accession of His Majesty King George V. but they will celebrate in prison. The Home Secretary, Sir John Gilmour, making that announcement, told that the suggestion of granting amnesty to certain types of prisoners was rejected and that "records and gardens of what other countries might do in similar circumstances, Britain must adopt her own custom."

The Home Secretary, no doubt, felt that under the present system in certain cases, prisoners are released to report under parole, and that when such is decided upon in the case of the prisoner and the state, release would take place without waiting for an anniversary. Doubtless too he feels that the law must be very just and to extremest trouble to get all the facts before sentencing men to prison.

There was a day when events of such a nature brought amnesty to political prisoners, but that day is not this age of British freedom which has passed beyond the period of imprisoning men for political views.

In the national rejoicing at the anniversary of the accession to the throne, there is no doubt a very soft spot in the hearts of people for others, and it is regrettable that all men cannot be free to enjoy the celebrations. But in the cases of prisoners sent down for more or less serious crimes, to the fullest knowledge of the courts these persons reeived what the law felt was justice for their deeds and hence it is felt that it would be unfair to the country to release them.

No doubt the British Government believes that prisoners have received their just dues, and that for their own good they should stay long enough under detention to work out as far as possible their redemption to lives of usefulness and to give society the reasonable assurance that a change has been affected in them that society can safely see.

Probably even in releasing prisoners undergoing detention for minor offences the goverment feels that it might be detrimental from the purpose of correction to release them, though of course there would be less objection to amnesty being granted them. No doubt the Government feels that those who have offended by their acts against the laws must be made to know that it pays to be lawabiding and that an event of the kind of the accession anniversary should not make any difference in the length of the terms the men are called upon to undergo.

There is a tendency the danger of too great sentimentality in connection with those who have offended against the laws, this sentimentalizing having a tendency to do, if carried to extremes, with the weakening of the chances of effective redemptive work among prisoners, for the prisoners' welfare as well as the protection of society is the concern of the state.

If amnesty wold make a man a better man, no doubt the Government would be favorable to such a measure at the time mentioned. But the weight of opinion seems to be that such would not necessarily follow.

SCHOOL ATTENDANCE IN U. S.

"More than fifty percent of the boys and girls in America of High School age are now in school," states the New York Times, and continues: This is the most significant fact in the growth of education in the United States or in fact in any part of the world. The percentage varies from State to State and is greater in urban than in rural communities. In some city systems nearly the entire population of these ages is in school. The democratization of education has reached the secondary school level, in fact as well as in purpose. In thousands of communities it was risen to a still higher level.

"A bill introduced at Albany changing the school-leaving age from 14 to 16 would carry a still larger percentage beyond the elementary school, for it is found that boys or girls of high mentality are often taken from school merely because they have reached the minimum school-leaving age and become eligible for working papers.

"The compulsory attendance up to 16 will compel the offering of a great variety of vocational courses and at additional expense for the increased numbers. But the answer is that the other half should not be denied what one-half already has. In a sense the bill is but recognizing and making the most of a condition that is already existent. The boy and girl who remain in school because there are no jobs will be continuing only out of the desire of the generation ahead of them that they may be the better prepared to live individually high-minded and socially useful lives. This bill is designed primarily not to keep them from labor, but to give all equal opportunity of preparation, so far as that is humanly possible.

JOSHING VANCOUVER

Did you ever hear a British Columbian boast about his province as the "land where it was always spring?"

Did you ever see flowers blooming in a Vancouver garden during a month when you know Ontario was still held fast by the grip of winter?

Did you ever have a person from Victoria regale you with details of how the Japanese current kept the Coast climate considerably balmy?

Well, with such things in mind, we tried to be sympathetic with Vancouver this morning. We had to point to ourselves that a city could hardly help it if it had a hinterland that was wild and woolly, and that insisted upon marooning it.

But Vancouver's understanding charity failed to respond. The closest we could come was: "It's cold but thank goodness we're not in Vancouver."—Hamilton Herald.

THEY HISSED THEIR NEWSPAPER

People have become so accustomed to their newspapers in these modern days that they are taken very much as a matter of course. They are accepted as part of the daily routine of life, and when they miss their paper, even for a day, they feel that something vital has gone.

This was never more vividly illustrated than it was a few days ago when a whole trainload of passengers was marooned in snowdrifts which blocked the railway line at Kamloops. They were cut off from the outside world. There were no newspapers to keep them in touch with what was going on. But they promptly set to work and published a newspaper of their own.

One passenger assumed the editorship. Members of the library association who happened to be on the train formed the technical staff. Other travellers contributed articles on current events, and others were the reporters who recorded the daily doings on the snowbound train. And the staff even secured enough advertising to pay for having the paper printed on a Kamloops mimeograph machine.

These folks missed their daily newspapers. They could not exist without them. And they know now a how many millions of people feel today. Remove the newspaper from modern life, and it would be like taking people right back to the dark ages.—Ottawa Times.

THE NEWER DEAL

"The money changers are back," is the gloomy view of the Methodist Federation of Social Service, but that they have acquired control of the President we do not agree. We think he has still sufficient liberty of action to send the bankers packing, if he wishes to. What has happened, as we see it, is that the President, having found the New Deal theorists do not know what they are talking about, has decided to fall back upon the old established principles of banking, modifying them somewhat to meet new conditions. When he took office he announced that he would try every remedy that seemed likely to effect a cure. He is trying them.

When New Deal theorists had their hand on the throttle the bankers and business were alarmed. President Roosevelt has turned to the bankers and business for support and the theorists are dejected. Not even so popular a president as Mr. Franklin D. Roosevelt can please everybody. But, it must be admitted, it is better for theorists to rave than for practical men to down trouble. The problem has been put squarely up to business and finance and if they do not make good, then things will happen in those United States.

If we are to credit the National City Bank of New York, business is on the mend. There is an upswing more rapid and vigorous than that of last spring, according to its February bulletin. On the basis of current statistical information it predicts that industrial operations will have a higher average this year's first quarter since 1984. A million automobiles will be turned out in the period ending March 31, something which has not happened since 1930. In the steel and textile industries production is up. "The composite indexes, which supply the best measure of general industrial activity, have, of course, advanced sharply." If people get back to work they will forget the theorists, and the President is hoping that finance and industry will see to it that the people are put back to work.—Hamilton Spectator.

Riches amassed in haste will diminish, but those collected by little will multiply. —Goethe.

I COULD NOT TELL THE JOYS

I never can be glad enough
Though I should laugh all day
I could not show enough of joy
That I have come this way.
That I have come from stranger realms,
Unguessed, unknown, unseen;
Though I leave, this world will be
As though I had not been.

I never can give thanks enough
For daily miracles
Of dawn and noon, of mellow eve
That weaves its subtle spells.
I could not ever tell the joys
Which quicken in my breast,
Though they were made a rosary
And counted without rest.

I never can be glad enough
To fitly, fully prove
The bliss of living, moving in
God's all-enfolding love!

SLEEPY-TIME DOWN SOUTH is the title of a popular song which is so soporific as to amount almost to a lullaby, suggesting rest free from all discordant sounds and a silence almost audible, broken only by the happy hum of insects glad to be warm and alive in a land, but folks down south, east, west, or north, in Belleville, are of the opinion that these night riders who cruise through the city with their huge freight vans between sunset and sunrise make a bit too much noise for perfect sleeping. Frequent complaints have come in from Front Street and Pinnacle Street, and now a voice from Pinnacle St. asks for a hearing as follows:

"The grumbling of the would-be sleepers on Front street leads to an offer to tranfer their beds to Pinnacle street, where the transfers unload. In the wee sma' hours the screeching of the brakes announces the arrival of a loaded transport—then clang goes the door to the pavement, and the roll of barrels, boxes, tires, begins. Workmen shout to each other, or one may whistle 'In the Good Old Summer Time,' to the rattle of a dozen chains. By four o'clock you fall in a doze, but here comes a train backing down to the warehouse. Wife says 'It's time to get up,' so goodbye for that night's sleep—but it's all in a lifetime, anyway. What kind of a trade is the other fellow willing to make? We'll trade Pinnacle street for Front street any time for sleeping purposes, if any.

A PLETHORA OF BIG NEWS monopolizing the Front Page streamers, little display has been given the sensational news from Ceylon of a cyclone there which has affected one million persons, one-sixth of the island's population. Thirty thousand are reported dead from what is called a "cyclonic tidal wave" for want of a better or worse name, for the disease is unknown to British medical science. Villages inundated with torpor, the inhabitants unable to help themselves, children dragging the bodies of parents to shallow graves, are said to be among the harrowing sights. Every swamp and pool of stagnant water on the island is being treated with oil in the surmise that mosquitoes may be carrying the disease germs. Reuters' cabled report of the calamities are uncertain how to fight the epidemic.

Letters to the Editor

February, 9th., 1935.

To The Editor,
Ontario Intelligencer,
Belleville.

Dear Sir:

May I crave sufficient space in your paper to correct the following which appeared in a report of Veteran activities in your issue of February the 6th:

"The Lale Sir Arthur Currie" Quote.

"The former honorary member of this old Belleville Branch of the Great War Veterans Association".

May I point out that, the late General Sir Arthur Currie, was a life member of Branch 99 Canadian Legion, and eventually became Grand President of the Canadian Legion (British Empire Service League) devoted his time and energy during the latter years of his life ameliorating conditions for all returned men in Canada, his one desire and hope was that all returned men would some day, be members of this organization of which he was, at that time, the head.

What more fitting memorial could we offer than by, thinking more than in service to, further those ideals which he so zealously worked.

May I by this means, reiterate the words which he left with his comrades in the Canadian Legion.

"They served till death, why not we?

Yours, very truly,
D. Bradford,
Secretary,
Belleville.

President, Branch 99, Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League.

Editor's Note—The statement that the late Sir Arthur Currie had been an honorary member of the old Belleville Branch of the Great War Veterans' Association, was accepted in good faith from a prominent local official of a returned soldiers' unit, still active in the city, and one with the welfare of returned men. The correction is gladly published.

RAILWAY PROBLEM

Belleville, Ont., Feb. 9, 1935.

To the Editor of The Ontario Intelligencer:

Dear Sir:

In my first letter to the press, I stated that according to Mr. Beatty was endeavouring to put the Canadian National Railway out of business and it now appears, from reading the recent papers, that he is still at it and has succeeded to a great extent. Frequent complaints have come in from Front Street and Pinnacle Street, and now a voice from Pinnacle St. asks for a hearing as follows:

"The grumbling of the would-be sleepers on Front street leads to an offer to tranfer their beds to Pinnacle street, where the transfers unload. In the wee sma' hours the screeching of the brakes announces the arrival of a loaded transport—then clang goes the door to the pavement, and the roll of barrels, boxes, tires, begins. Workmen shout to each other, or one may whistle 'In the Good Old Summer Time,' to the rattle of a dozen chains. By four o'clock you fall in a doze, but here comes a train backing down to the warehouse. Wife says 'It's time to get up,' so goodbye for that night's sleep—but it's all in a lifetime, anyway. What kind of a trade is the other fellow willing to make? We'll trade Pinnacle street for Front street any time for sleeping purposes, if any.

Mr. Beatty says the Canadian Pacific Railway is going to help the country one cent, Mr. J. A. Douglas of Hamilton, according to a recent despatch, says that the Canadian Pacific Railway from time to time has received $250,000,000 in aid from our Government in years gone by and of course some of that owed for interest is being paid immediately at Regina, Mr. Beatty said that the Canadian Pacific had no debt was growing at the rate of $50,000,000 per year. Now if I took a partner in with me I would want to know that he was breaking even or a little ahead of the game but in endeavouring to form a partnership with the Canadian National Railway the financial position of Canadian National Railway does not seem to make any difference to Mr. Beatty.

I see by one of the latest papers that Mr. Beatty is still advocating the unification plan.

Immediately after Mr. Euler's speech advocating a holding company Mr. Beatty was favorable to that plan as it let him in on 850 banks but now the plan seems to suit him better. He doesn't say just what basis it is on but it looks to be like a 60-40 or a 75-25 basis. The hardest job he has got on his hands is to keep the employees quiet but when he goes to scrap those 800 miles or more of duplication railway lines and non-producing lines that they have arranged to abandon, they will have a harder job to make the people believe that it won't affect them very seriously.

My plan is to keep the roads going for the people's accommodation and not scrap all the branch lines but because they are going broke a little.

I would consider the wants of the people first and if my plan is carried out it would employ more men than Mr. Beatty's plan and be more satisfactory to the majority of the people and to our country. My plan is for the people to use their own road "ship and travel O.N.R. and When sure any one shows me that my plan is wrong I will give up and say no more—but not till then.

An enjoyable time was spent last evening in the Sunday School Room of St. Thomas' Church, the occasion being a supper tendered to the members of the choir by the Junior Women's Auxiliary.

The Belleville Hardware Hockey Team defeated the Electrical Lee night in hockey circles, the score being 7 to 0. The Electricians say that with a couple of year's practice they will be able to defeat the Lock Factory boys. Lack of wind and the fact that the puck was too small caused them to lose last night. The following composed the teams: Hardware Company—Phillips, Lees, Saunders, Rowe, Bowan, Robinson, McGuire. Electricians: H. Greenlee, J. Greenlee, Coen, McCargar, Zufelt, Barrett, W. Holton refereed the game to the satisfaction of all.

40 YEARS AGO

FEB. 9TH, 1896

The thermometer registered 30 degrees below zero and with a northwest gale it was not joking.

Mr. J. P. Thompson is in Montreal on business.

Dr. Elizabeth Ansbury was in Campbellford yesterday.

Mr. T. P. Bowen of the Bickle Company is in New York on a buying trip.

Mr. Michael Reddy, who has been visiting his sister, Mrs. John Barrett, left yesterday for his home in California.

Navigation on the sidewalks this morning has been exceedingly treacherous.

The market today was very small there being less than a dozen sleighs on the square.

The new ice skating rink on Pinnacle Street will be opened on the 19th inst. with a fancy dress carnival. The Oddfellows' Band will be in attendance.

The meeting of the city council was a failure last night. The city clerk, Mr. Wm. McD. Hanley, the caretaker, two reporters and a dog were all that put in an appearance. As they were not considered a quorum in the eyes of the law no business was held.

The Board of Health was summoned yesterday afternoon for organization. Dr. Tracy, Messrs Wm. Bland and Hunter Mackenzie were present but only members to respond and not being a quorum they were forced to adjourn.

HON D.A. CROLL PREVENTS STRIKE

Tie-up of Windsor Street Railway Laid Over For Time

Windsor, Ont., Feb. 9 (CP)—Thru the intervention of Hon. David Croll, provincial minister of welfare, and Municipal Affairs, the threatened strike of street-car employes in the Border Cities did not materialize at midnight and further conferences today were expected to straighten out the matter.

Walter P. Reid, secretary of the Street Railwaymen's Union, revealed that Mr. Croll had wired from Toronto asking the men to postpone strike action until 2 o'clock this afternoon when it is expected the minister will be here to act in the role of conciliator.

The men are demanding a 50-cent per hour minimum wage. The present scale for regular employees is said to be 50 cents but there are a number of men reported to number 100 or 60, who are part-time workers and their scale is said to be between 33 and less than 50 cents per hour.

S. Jh. McKernan, chairman of the three-man board, has controlled the Windsor, Essex and Lake Shore Railway since the Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission quished the management last September, has refused to accede to the demands of the union, claiming the road is unable to carry the additional financial burden.

SCOTT'S SCRAPBOOK - - By R. J. Scott

EIGHT HOUR DAY 48 HOUR WEEK FOR INDUSTRY

necessary to fulfill Canada's obligations under international treaties. At the end of the war, Mr. Bennett asserted, the safeguarding of the rights of labor was considered of such international importance, that it was recognized in the peace treaty signed by Canada. The treaty led in turn to setting up of the League of Nations and the International Labor Organization. The latter had adopted the draft convention, which the House of Commons resumed last night.

Both Mr. King and Mr. Bennett approved of ratification but they objected to the government's avowed intention of asking for ratification of its proposed reform enactments.

Views Different

As civilization advanced the views of legislators became different, argued Mr. Bennett. In two recent decided cases the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council had upheld the right of the Dominion to step into the provincial sphere of legislative action to comply with international treaties, and to control of aeronautics and radio.

The intention of framers of the British North America Act was called upon by Mr. Bennett to justify his stand. Quoting Viscount Haldane, he said in interpreting a statute one should not allow great verbal subtleties to defeat the object of the Act, which was to establish a system of government in Canada.

The intention was, he said, "to give to the central government those high functions and almost sovereign powers by which nationality of legislation may be secured on all questions of common concern." How could the high functions of the nation respecting its obligations to foreign countries be fulfilled if execution of hours of work be carried out, he asked, by local legislation and not by the Federal Parliament for all Canada?

Cronie Better Fitting

Canada has a bad record in approving conventions, declared Mr. Geneve, Mr. Bennett told the House. Canada had refused four League of Nations conventions, while Bulgaria had approved 37, Austria 19, Switzerland (Finland) 17, Germany, 17; United Kingdom, 18 and the Irish Free State 31, he declared.

Ratification of the conventions would create a feeling of international feeling, predicted the Prime Minister. The first convention he proposed was passed last night, and dealt with conditions under which seamen could be hired. The matter of provincial ratification was unnecessary for the general revision of shipping laws.

Regarding hours of labor and one day's rest in seven, "there is no possible doubt that we have the authority to legislate," declared Mr. Bennett. He claimed the courts had ruled several times that provincial statutes were invalid, related to treaty rights, which were exclusively the Dominion's.

The Privy Council of Canada, he committed the nations to adopt the eight-hour week as a goal to be attained and this definitely meant that it came within the jurisdiction of the Dominion.

Lapointe Draws Comparisons

A mere assertion of jurisdiction did not give jurisdiction, contended Mr. Lapointe. He drew a distinction between the draft convention before the House and a binding treaty and questioned whether the section of the constitution dealing with treaties applied in the present case. Further he argued that the Privy Council expressly made an exception for federal states such as Canada, intended to safeguard upon them the obligation of bringing the convention to the attention of the authorities competent to deal with such matters. The legislative power of parliament.

The Prime Minister's broadcast speeches, fine as they were, did not change the "constitution of Canada," said Mr. Lapointe. "At another point he said that he was expecting a "new deal" from this move they might get a "miracle."

The former Minister warned against proceeding in a hasty or unwarranted manner. Any legislature should be based on solid constitution foundations. There was also a danger in upsetting established constitutional rights. No class in the country had a greater interest in the maintenance of constitutional rights than labor.

Ascetain Power Is Warning

Those sincerely in favor of advanced labor legislation "as well advised" to be sure of their ground so that labor would be given valid legislation around any session instead of an empty shadow.

Mr. Lapointe urged that before some of the reforms proposals be proceeded with the Judicial Committee of Canada should be ascertained.

Mr. Mackenzie King could not agree Canada's request had been met in ratifying conventions adopted by the League.

The conventions for the most part represented a minimum requirement and Canada was one of the most advanced countries in the world in labor standards and labor legislation. The reason it had not been necessary to ratify conventions was that Canada's standard was so high.

"Instead of being behind other nations in these matters we have been ahead of them at every turn," said Mr. King. "Before 1919 the Dominion Parliament had approved two conventions. It had been the policy of every Government since to proceed with caution, he said, wisely approved of ratification of the conventions.

Had a conference of the provinces been called a year ago, said Mr. King, and the notice given the constitutional questions involved could have been solved by agreement. An amendment to the British North America Act, he declared, would have affected which would have paved the way for legislation of unquestioned validity. It was part of the Government with proceeding in a helpful manner especially as respecting to give Parliamentary institutions sufficient opportunity to function.

Sure Parliament Has Power

Premier Bennett closed debate. He said the Liberal leader, in power 10 years, "was content to did not exist, failed to secure unanimity among the provinces and left the problem for the Prime Minister should have done. There had been several conferences, some of which some successful, some not but always there were concrete proposals to put before the nation.

Referring to the letter he wrote to the provincial premiers last August, Mr. Bennett said he only sent forth their own approach of obtaining exclusive jurisdiction over social legislation.

The Prime Minister repeated his earlier statement his government would support the League of Nations and introduce legislation based on the convention. There was only one way the whole nation could speak and that was through parliament. He was sure in his own mind the Dominion had power to legislate.

$100 MINIMUM WAGE IS ASKED

Amalgamated Civil Servants Make Presentation

Ottawa, Feb. 8 (CP)—The Amalgamated Civil Servants of Canada asked Prime Minister R. B. Bennett that a minimum salary of $100 a month be set for all full-time government service posts following by men, re-establishment of the system of promotions and salary increases and reform of superannuations. The delegation included A. H. Helm of Kitchener, Ont.

"The delegates claimed $179 male servants were being paid less than $1,200 a year in 1929 and the number had been increased considerably since then by the general 10 percent salary cut imposed as an economy measure.

They said during the last three years Civil Servants had contributed through pay cuts a total of $35,-000,000 to the National Treasury.

They asked full political rights for Civil Servants, including participation of running for political office.

The delegates declared revelations before the Royal Commission on price spreads and Mass Buying had shown "the condition of the low income dog in Canada is deplorable." They said, "had the principles set forward in the Labor part of the Versailles Peace treaties (which Canada signed) been lived up to there would be no necessity of price spreads committees or royal commissions." They asked a minimum wage principle 15 years after the treaties were signed.

The delegation sought optional retirement on completion of 35 years' service or at the age of 60.

Mrs. H. Thompson has been suffering with an infected hand due to a cat biting her finger. The doctor in Consecon was in attendance.

In a recent letter received from Mrs. Ed. Anderson, St. Petersburg, Fla., she says: "Sunday, Jan. 20, was a warm day here and the Methodist Old gentlemen were mopping the perspiration from their bald heads and at the band concert in the park everyone was looking for a shady seat. The next day was unusually cold, every seat was full, the park seating 10,000 and the streets filled with cars. Tuesday it rained and turned colder, Wednesday was warmer. Canadian tourists are having their picnic today, Thursday. We have built over Tampa Bay at a cost of a million dollars, a new causeway, at the end for entertainments. The city is full of tourists, some are coming and going. Others are told, are leaving and returning home because of the high prices of rooms, houses and apartments. The people are nice and friendly and I have no room for an introduction. We have driven out on a number of sight-seeing tours. The air is lovely and the coarse grass is not fit for pasture.

The Green Benches.

Upon the green benches in St. Petersburg sit the old and young,
The sun-seeking tourists very happy throng.
Merry maidens are there from Missouri and Maine,
And cripples and widows, alluring and vain;
Gay Highlanders are there, with suits plick and span—
The young and the old, and the shrewd business man:
Grandfathers we see and grandmothers too,
And husbands and wives their devotion display.
While the widower views with covetous eye
The sly, dashing damsel who smiles passing by;
Newcomers are told to beware of soft soap
For Canada are known to hand out this dope;
But the friends that we meet on these benches so green,
Are the friendliest people the best ever seen.
As we sit in the sun, we talk to each other
As friend unto friend, and brother with brother;
Forgetting the line that doth us divide
As here on the benches we sit side by side;
In memory will linger these days when we meet
These gay winter tourists in the town of St. Pete.—H.B.A.

ST. ANDREW'S W.M.S.

The regular meeting of the W.M.S. of St. Andrew's assembled in the lecture room of the church on Wednesday for the annual meeting of the year with the president, Mrs. J. Parpry in the chair. The meeting opened with the singing of Hymn 381, Mrs. Fleming accompanying at the piano.

Followed a reading from the Scriptures by Mrs. Worrall, after which the president led in prayer.

The minutes of last meeting were read by the secretary, Mrs. Cook, who also reported some correspondence and the financial statement. Interned the Welcome and Welfare departments of the auxiliary, which was satisfactorily disposed of.

Next in the program was the roll call, and it was gratifying to note the large number present, the whole being an expression that there would be even a greater response at the next meeting. So, all members please note.

The pleasing ceremony took place at this points of the proceedings when Mrs. Reid was presented with a life membership certificate, the gift of the Birthday League, the secretary of which is Mrs. Bert Reid.

Mrs. W. J. Walker made the presentation, complimenting the recipient. Mrs. Kidd in her speech of presentation, said that the main object in raising funds was the next subscription or discussion, and the invitation of Mrs. Wallbridge to have a tea and home cooking sale at her home was gratefully accepted, the date of which decided on later.

The treasurer's report on the finances was then heard and commented upon.

An appeal for volunteers to help Mrs. Barragar with the Mission Band work was heard, and several ladies responded.

The July members who had been deputed to visit the shut-ins for January reported that owing to the inclemency of the weather they had been unable to pay as many visits as they had hoped to but were willing to carry on the work for another month.

Mrs. George Reid, a valued member of the society, at present indisposed, prepared for this meeting a very interesting paper, based on one of the topics of the new study book; "Fellow Citizens," and this was read by Mrs. Hanson, and listened to very attentively and appreciatively by the members, several of whom suggested that the paper be kept on file for future reference and re-reading.

Mrs. Parpry then introduced a new feature, and one which was highly commended by those present. It was the passing out of what one might call the highlights from Glad Tidings, assembling them and reading them aloud at the meeting. This was in the nature of an experiment, Mrs. Parpry stating that it was successful that the plan is to be continued. The meeting was closed with another hymn and the members repeating the Lord's Prayer in unison.

TABERNACLE W. A.

The regular meeting of the W. A. of Tabernacle Church, was held in the church parlours with Mrs. H. Hall, President, in the chair, and a splendid attendance of members. After the opening hymn, all repeated the Lord's Prayer. Scripture lesson, Mrs. Pelin, was read by Mrs. Hall, followed by prayer. The regular order of business was proceeded with, a report of 60 visits had been made by various members. The congregational supper held January 14, was a decided success with a splendid attendance and all were delighted to know that the budget had been balanced for the year's work which is very gratifying to all concerned and a real inspiration to every member to press forward to do things during the new year.

Congratulations and best wishes were extended Mr. and Mrs. G. S. Sharpe on having attained their Golden Wedding anniversary and many kind wishes were showered on them. Sharpe responded in her sweet manner and thanked all for their kindness.

A programme was held by Group Convener Mrs. Burgess, who made a splendid convener. The following items being: Reading by Mrs. Harrison; reading by Mrs. Fraser; Mrs. Gerow; Reading by Mrs. I. B. Naylor; Solo by Miss Audrey Burgess; Reading by Mrs. Gerow. Each number was well received and proved very entertaining. This concluded the programme which was followed by the closing hymn and all repeating the Mizpah.

A home cooking sale was held by this group following the meeting which was a decided success.

Library Corner

"Liberty in the Modern State" by Harold J. Laski. Harper and Brothers, New York and London, 288 pages.

Liberty has been so confused with License that it is difficult to determine its true nature. Harold J. Laski has given his definition in the first sentence of this book. "I use by liberty the absence of restraint upon the existence of those social conditions which, in modern civilization, are the necessary guarantees of individual happiness," he writes. He proceeds then to subject these "things" liberty is essential" by an absence of restraint."

Mr. Laski, who is a professor of Political Science in the University of London, has been called "a practical socialist." In this way he would compare with Professor Underhill who is professor of History in the Manchester Guardian.Fortunately Mr. Laski realizes this. He does not write with various platitudes about liberty. Neither does he generalize in great length. He goes examples to illustrate his point. Consequently this is a clearcut statement of the democratic socialist's champion of "Liberty in the Modern State."

"What Bentham, Mill or Acton said of liberty is not adequate to the new needs of our time," observes a writer in the Manchester Guardian.Fortunately Mr. Laski realizes this. He does not write with various platitudes about liberty. Neither does he generalize in great length. He goes examples to illustrate his point. Consequently this is a clear-cut statement of the democratic socialist's champion of "Liberty in the Modern State."

"The Heritage of Freedom" by James T. Shotwell. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 1935 edition. 136 pages.

This is a small volume dealing with "the way in which the United States and Canada have come to the heritage of freedom from Western Europe." It pictures the position of these two countries in "the Community of Nations." And it analyses the effect of the World War upon their respective foreign policies.

The book is virtually a collection of three lectures delivere' by the author at the University of Columbia on the foundation of the Pearson Kirkman Memorial Lectureship. There is an explanatory foreword of this foundation by H. J. Cody, President of the University of Toronto. The author is a Professor of History in Columbia University and Director of the Division of Economics and History of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

Although there is much of the lecture-room in this volume, the little book it does not read drearily. It is a concise but comprehensive history of "The Heritage of Freedom" and its application to the present.

"Our Starving Liberties" by R. L. Duffus, Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston and New York. 244 pages.

"Can we afford liberties?" asks the author of this pert little volume. He has considered the effect of the depression years on the public liberties. His survey was made in the United States with ten big-city libraries taken as a basis. However it may be applied indirectly to those in Canada for the conditions are similar.

Unfortunately the falling off in the book purchasing by libraries during the depression era was paralleled by an increase in the demands made upon them by their patrons. If the depression discouraged the buying of books at retail it encouraged to a greater degree their reading. Of course the public liberties have suffered.

This booklet, then, appears to be an appeal in behalf of these bookseller's alsohoug; it is also in sympathy with the librarians who have to ration their patrons. And it explains the proper relation of the taxpayer to the public library.

THESE GIRLS SHOULD MAKE NEW CONTACTS

Dear Miss Fairfax:

We are two girls, 18 and 19 years old. We live in a mining town where our fathers have a job as superintendent, and we come in contact with people, many of whom consider us a word of English. The girls we know are very unrefined, the boys loud, foolish and roughnecters.

We went to school in a nearby city, and both of us did well in music, but there is no chance of going on with that in this place. We are both so discouraged, and decided to write to you for some suggestions.

E. and M.

The best way to meet young people of your own sort is naturally to go where they're to be found. The city in which you went to school is not too far away for you to keep in touch with, especially if in regard to your musical interests.

I think it would be a magnificent idea if you could make some contacts between the music lovers of the big city and the mining folk of your town. These miners and their families may not have time to speak much English, but they come of a people essentially musical.

Get up a choral society and have those people study their folk songs. I'm sure your musical friends and instructors would be interested in this project, and it would be the means of keeping you in touch with people of congenial tastes.

IS IT A CAR ESSENTIAL?

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have never asked many girls to go out with me, because not often did I have the use of the family car when I'lved at home. Now, since I've left home and have a job in the big city, I am entirely without a car.

I am interested in a certain girl and would like to take her out, but I feel that I should own some sort of a car. And I feel a little humiliated when asking her for a date, as I have only a taxi to offer her.

Young Man

If you could see the letters that come to this column, you would feel that taking a girl out in a taxi puts you in the higher brackets class. A great many very nice girls devotedly go great lengths when taken out in a street-car. This is especially true in a big city, where distances are far and taxis are expensive.

ANSWER TO THREE QUESTIONS

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Is it natural for a girl to have a man who tries to make advances, if she is of the type which disapproves of such things?

Ans.—She should politely but firmly squelch him.

What do you think of petting? And is it necessary to pet to be natural?

Ans.—Girls are divided into petters and non-petters. A clever girl knows how to sail her course between prudishness and familiarity, and how to avoid getting petted by those who are seriously in love and expect to marry the petter. Girls who pet to be popular are cheap.

To keep in touch with, especially in regard to your musical interests.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I have never asked many girls to go out with me, because not often did I have the use of the family car when I'lved at home. Now, since I've left home and have a job in the big city, I am entirely without a car.

I am interested in a certain girl and would like to take her out, but I feel that I should own some sort of a car. And I feel a little humiliated when asking her for a date, as I have only a taxi to offer her.

Young Man

If you could see the letters that come to this column, you would feel that taking a girl out in a taxi puts you in the higher brackets class. A great many very nice girls devotedly go great lengths when taken out in a street-car. This is especially true in a big city, where distances are far and taxis are expensive.

ANSWER TO THREE QUESTIONS

Dear Miss Fairfax:

Is it natural for a girl to have a man who tries to make advances, if she is of the type which disapproves of such things?

Ans.—She should politely but firmly squelch him.

What do you think of petting? And is it necessary to pet to be natural?

Ans.—Girls are divided into petters and non-petters. A clever girl knows how to sail her course between prudishness and familiarity, and how to avoid getting petted by those who are seriously in love and expect to marry the petter. Girls who pet to be popular are cheap.

To keep in touch with, especially in regard to your musical interests.

I think it would be a magnificent idea if you could make some contacts between the music lovers of the big city and the mining folk of your town. These miners and their families may not have time to speak much English, but they come of a people essentially musical.

Get up a choral society and have those people study their folk songs. I'm sure your musical friends and instructors would be interested in this project, and it would be the means of keeping you in touch with people of congenial tastes.

IS A CAR ESSENTIAL?

There's a warning in this turned-up nose!

THAT little person who usually wades into her food with such gusto seems to be expecting to have to turn up her nose at her good dinner!

For usually, there's trouble brewing when a child is listless and has no appetite. Something is wrong—and often that something is constipation.

Yes, even when elimination is regular—for it may not be complete.

The tell-tale signs

When you notice the tell-tale signs of constipation—loss of appetite, or fretfulness, peevishness or "crankiness"—give a laxative promptly. But—make sure it's a children's laxative.

Give Castoria! It is made especially for children—and has been for 11 years. It is a safe laxative for young systems. Contains no narcotics, no harsh purgatives. Will not cause nausea or painful griping, as able and soft it given a spraying once a day with brilliantine. At night friction a little into the scalp; use it immediately after the shampoo.

Be cautious when selecting a shampoo powder. Use a mild one, rinse the suds away with a hot water pressure from a spray. The night before the shampoo have a scalp massage, using olive or mineral oil. Slap on a towel which has been wrung out of hot water. It will force the lubricant into the very fabric of the scalp.

Fashion Flashes

Every girl likes to know what the stars wear when they fulfil social engagements. Here is a hint for you. At a smart luncheon recently Norma Shearer wore a black high-necked black woolen frock with two strands of pearls and a coat of black woolen trimmed with two silver fox skins. With the coat was a dachshund matr around each arm and also an amusing hat of black felt that comes to two huge ears at the top.

Make your own sports costume. At the shops one can pick up a jacket, a skirt and a sweater that can be interchanged, and your little girl, known for her smart clothes, wears a bright red soft zinnia cherry pink tweed, a dark brown skirt, a bunnie of deep pink and brown in a splashy print blouse and a dark brown felt hat embroidered with her initials in pink.

Be colorful when it comes to sports clothes. A nice outfit for spectator, sports or travel is a frock of olive green woolen with bright brown accessories, or a frock of cranberry red with gay accents and accessories.

All eyes follow a smartly dressed woman. So there will be much admiration for an early Spring costume in navy blue woolen ornamented with spaced motifs of square silver pastilles covered in blue net. There is a cape of the same fabric, with the pastilles applied to form bowed straps.

Walk easily in smart new shoes. Cool and comfortable is an open-shanked tie shoe in blue kidskin with an applique of black and gold stitched and piped in navy blue.

Under starry skies down South, petals are gaining ground. A nice evening frock is in red, gray, yellow, and blue—a large, splashy flower design on a black ground. A huge bunch of flowers in front repeats the colors and blossoms of the print.

Don't believe that velvet is only for cold weather. The smartest designers are busy using it for Spring, especially for smart accessories. With a frock of green, one woman wears a beret, wide-flared gloves and scarf of real velvet in black.

Hold that your arms and slip into the finest resort coat of the season. It is in the very gay shades and with a collar ma.. of huge tabs of fox that in some instances run from white to champagne brown.

Look grand for that important party. A lovely frock is in jade gold tissue, the bodice a mass of complicated shirring, which at the low neckline in front with an enormous brooch done in various colors. It comes to suggest a colorful Persian design. The skirt has a short, double flare.

Don't be afraid of colorful tweeds wears a bright red soft zinnia cherry pink tweed, a dark brown skirt, a bunnie of deep pink and brown in a splashy print blouse and a dark brown felt hat embroidered with her initials in pink.

A carry-over from the slit skirt of the Winter is to be found in suits designed for early Spring. Thus a suit of gray woolen has a slit on each side of the jacket bound with black silk braid. There is a corresponding slit on either side of the skirt.

In the mood for resort wear is a lovely frock of pale blue satin. The skirt fullness from the knee down in irregular pleatings. There is a matching cape, made entirely of the pleated satin.

ENGAGEMENT AND WEDDING RINGS

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

1. Is it all right for the bride-to-be to help choose the engagement ring? 2. Is it all right for the bride to have a plain wedding ring and a golden wedding ring? 3. Who gives the bride away when her father is dead? 4. Is this fiance this important question of the type of engagement ring that she prefers. I have a friend who likes to choose her own engagement ring that the girl is to wear. If it is, how can she find out without everything should be done, within reason and within budgets, to please the girl who is going to wear, what is becoming to her finger.

Perplexed

1. Yes; in these days when it is taken for granted that the fiance should give the girl the ring, this important question of the type of engagement ring that she prefers. If the girl has a choice in the jewel and ring she prefers, so to his jeweler, after consultation with the jeweler, telling him frankly his budget for the ring, have the jeweler choose several that are within that budget, and make an arrangement with the young man to bring the girl to choose from these. Or several stones may be chosen, and the jeweler may have sketches made for appropriate settings, and the young man may then choose the ring that engagement ring that the girl is to wear. If it is, how can she find out without everything should be done, within reason and within budgets, to please the girl who is going to wear, what is becoming to her finger.

2. This is as the girl chooses, but usually special care is taken to have the same metal in both engagement and wedding rings, to carry out harmony and ensemble. A platinum wedding ring would be more harmonious with a silver engagement ring than would a gold wedding ring.

3. Yes, it would be the most appropriate thing for the prospective bride to ask her uncle to present her in marriage. Or, if the bride prefers, she may have her uncle walk up the aisle with her, and then have her mother present her in marriage. The mother sits in the first pew at the left of the aisle, and at the appropriate time in the ceremony, rises, steps and gives her daughter in marriage.

4. The minister indicates when he is ready for the bridal party to enter ceremony, and the best man then leads the girl to the altar, turning in turn hands it to the minister. After having blessed it returns it to the bridegroom to place on the third finger of the bride's left hand with the words, "With this ring and I plight unto thee my troth".

WELCOME HER INTO THE FAMILY

Dear Mrs. Beeckman:

My husband's brother has just written to us that he is engaged to a girl we met once when visiting his family. My husband's family do not like this girl. She was lovely to me and I do not have any reason for not liking her. Will you please write a note wishing her happiness? If not, what would you suggest I do? Would you suggest a note, in case you think one would be proper?

Do by all means follow your human and friendly impulse to write this girl a gracious letter of good wishes and welcome into the family. It would be very kind of you to do this, since the girl was so kind to you when you were there. It is probably yearning for a friendly word of welcome from the members of her husband's family. Tell her how happy you were at the news of her marriage; tell her of your good wishes for her happiness always; tell her how much you enjoyed meeting her and knowing her and how much you appreciated her kindness to you while you were visiting your husband's brother; and tell her that you and your husband are eager to have her and her husband come to visit you very soon.

Her lovely eyes spar kle with vibrant health

By HELEN FOLLETT

Eyes dull? Don you dream about magic drops that will restore the old time sparkle? Chuck the idea, forget it. Bright eyes depend upon health, good spirits, natural animation.

Loss of sleep, worry, nervousness, indigestion all have a bad effect upon the eyes. They cause dark care, too. Twice a day bathe them with a good eye lotion, then with an eye-cup, fresh portion for each eye. Never rub the eyes with a woolen glove. Try to treat them kindly, with a good reading light, properly placed. When they tire of close work, stand at a window, rest them by looking far away.

When using mascara to darken lashes, or applications to shadow the lids, protect the eyes carefully. Stand by them and they'll stand by you. And if they show weakness, get specs, no matter how much you hate them.

It is a sad moment when a woman realizes that she isn't the straight, slender, sapuline figure she was. Discretion at the waist line, maybe, getting somewhat higher. Discretion at the knees, maybe, sizes larger than in the old days. Very sad story.

The best thing for her is a course at the gymnasium. With regular exercise the waistline will probably keep on with the fight against weight until she is back to normal. Then she can relax and be happy.

"Lives of a Bengal Lancer"

Film Takes Four Years to Make and Proves Costly

So many problems confront the new college graduate of today, and so few of them are easy, so close to the average family, that "Gentlemen Are Born" which opens Monday at the Capitol Theatre, might well have been taken from the experiences of individual known to most of those who have witnessed it, and who were profoundly impressed by the picture.

"Gentlemen Are Born," one has the leading role, is supported by three of the finest actresses on the screen, Jean Muir, Margaret Lindsay and Ann Dvorak. None of them have ever been seen in finer roles or have given better performances.

Those, who portrays a poor boy whose ambition is to become a great paperman, is in love with Margaret Lindsay, in the role of Peggy, a wealthy society girl. Miss Lindsay's reading of the difficult assignment and she rises to those intense scenes with the genius of a real artiste. Jean Muir is appealing, sweet and thoroughly sympathetic rendering of her role.

Jean Muir portrays the sweetheart, and later the wife, of Tom's college chum, Ann Dvorak, who has a tragic part. She is the screen wife of another of the college chums, but this one succumbs to the drink temptations as they exist. She gives an outstanding portrayal of the girl whose life is beset with tragedy. Vicki Vroman, former Princess Theatre cashier, has this part. It is his initial picture, as it is that of Robert Kahn, the fourth member of the quartette whose brilliant prospects and hope go glimmering in a financial crash.

Excellent Featurettes

A well-selected group of short subjects support this feature presentation, including a one-spotlight comedy with Ben Blue in "All Seated Up", an interesting Pepper Pot of Movie Memories and a Terry-Toon, Mighty Mouse in "Down on the Farm" its cups Monday and Tuesday, shows at 2.30; 7.15; and 9.15. Wednesday and Thursday "Lives of a Bengal Lancer" comes to the screen of the Belle. It has a stirring story of love and adventure in the Indian Frontier Service. It is a production that will stir the imagination of every Canadian. Gary Cooper, Franchot Tone, Richard Cromwell, Kathleen Burke and Sir Guy Standing in the principal roles. "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" is a thrilling colorful and action crammed story of the exploits and adventures of England's Colonial soldiers in India.

The author, Francis Yeats Brown, was himself an officer of the Lancers, which Achmed Abdullah, film adapter, and four British army officers served as technical advisers during the production of the film. The story of "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" is that of the extraordinary bravery, discipline and skill that has enabled a mere handful of British officers to maintain rule over the teeming millions of India. Cooper is a captain of the 41st Bengal Lancers, who marry her ill fated friend and had children, was sentenced to ten years imprisonment for killing her cowardly husband, fond of the children, reported of the police that a kidnaped boy had appeared.

Investigation showed the woman took the boy, six and four years old, on a river steamer at night and threw them into the paddle wheel.

sue him and thus lead the Lancers to disaster.

Cooper and Tone follow and are caught when they attempt to free Cromwell. Cooper's brother, Jack, well discloses the whereabouts of a tremendous cache of ammunition. Mohammed Khan captures the ammunition, brings it back to the fortress and plans to lead a revolution against the British.

The Bengal Lancers ride on the fortress, prepared to face destruction if they will stop the revolution until reinforcements can arrive. The needless sacrifice is prevented by Cooper, who, by a daring manoeuvre single-handedly destroys the ammunition, effects the release of the prisoners, and saves the Bengal Lancers.

Directed by Henry Hathaway, "The Lives of a Bengal Lancer" has been more than four thousand players in its cast during the four years of production. Monte Blue, Douglas Dumbrille, Kathleen Burke, C. Aubrey Smith, Colin Tapley and Akim Tamiroff appear in the supporting cast.

Your old friend Popeye the Sailor, in an amusing and clever Katzune, "Shuteye the Peacemaker Bill," and the Belle Latest News Flashes are another feature presentation on the same program.

COST OF TRIP IS ONLY TENTATIVE

Veterans Working For Cheaper Fare For Pilgrimage

"Our proposed pilgrimage to Vimy and the Old Country next year will be non profit one for the League, and the price of $150 which has been named as covering expenses for returned men, who wish to go is just a tentative price", stated Mr. Cleo Bishop secretary of the local branch of the Canadian Legion, today.

The statement was in answer to the resolution passed by members of local Legion branches, which was forwarded to the Provincial Command of the Legion, asking that this price be reduced.

The official pilgrimage, which is for comrades and ladies of ex-service men and their families and friends, will commence the month they arrived during the Great War is being organized and sponsored by the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League and will occupy the months of June and July 1936.

A circular issued by the Provincial Command in request to the pilgrimage points out, "while it is not yet possible to quote the exact cost of the tour, pending completion of the itinerary in France, the Canadian Legion is able to announce that the cost, from Canadian port of embarkation and back, including all expenses mentioned above, with third class accommodation will not exceed $160. It is pointed out by local officials, that this may be materially reduced.

A.—I did.
Q.—How many nails were there?
A.—Eight.
Wilents showed him a package of nails.
Q.—Are those the nails?
A.—Seven are here.
Q.—And you gave me one yesterday, which was admitted as evidence?
A.—Yes.
Bornman laid the attic board on the jury box rail and counted the nail holes, pointing to each as he laid.
The Nail Inserted.
Wilents then carefully inserted one of the nails in the hole from which it had been extracted and photostat exhibited the board.
The attorney general offered the nail for identification.
C. Lloyd Fisher of the defence counsel began cross-examination.
Q.—Did you testify the defence could visit Hauptmann's house at any time?—A. I did not.
Q. Oh, "if it was present", did you testify to that before?
Wilents objected and was sustained.
Fisher asked of Bornmann who at this direction of the state had rented Charles Lindbergh's apartment. He answered, had gone with the referee named to the house.
Wilents' objection was sustained.
Fisher turned to Wilents and said:
Circularity Over Nails.
Q. You say they are the nails because they are the same size and shape?
A. I know they are the nails because I saw the nail holes.
Q. You identify them from that paper? A. Yes, they were taken out of the board and the package has been in our possession since.
Bornmann interrupted, had lifted the attic board from the joists which his helpers had taken off of tools.
His statement explained the absence of tool marks on the board, a point made by the defence.
Fisher continued the cross-examination and Bornmann was excused.
Arthur J. Koehler, federal wood expert, was called as the next rebuttal witness.
Wilents questioned him about nick marks on wood by planes.
Q.—Type a photostat, Koehler was not a practical carpenter and therefore could not give that opinion, was overruled.
Q.—What have you to say of the similarity of the markings left by Hauptmann's plane on the lumber brought here and the marks on the rungs of the ladder?
Nick Marks Identical
Pope objected the expert was not competent to testify to that, was overruled, and the witness was allowed to reply.
A.—The marks were identical when the plane was used straight on the board. When the plane was held at an angle, the marks were closer together.
Q.—Does that interfere with the identification of the plane marks as identical?
A.—No, it does not.
Wilents handed next the two short boards used by the defence to demonstrate the play in wood of alleged different origin.
"These two boards," Koehler declared, "were cut from the same board for a number of reasons."
Charles A. Lindbergh, lumberman of Waterbury, Conn., for the defence testified the boards were cut from the same board.
Koehler went on with his "reasons" for saying the two planes were identical.
Q.—Prior to that planing was that board of the same roughness as the other?
A.—Yes.
Q.—Do you still say that the attic board and the rail were once of the same board?
A.—Yes.
Nails Identified
Koehler testified the nails found in the attic in possession after the removal. He identified them.
Q.—Could the nail holes in the attic board upright of the ladder were the same size as those found in the attic board? A.—I believe that it was allegedly cut.
He produced a photograph of forest pine and said that was the kind of tree from which Hauptmann's plane lumber. The picture was received in evidence.
Wilents showed Koehler a defence photograph of a piece of wood identified by defence witness as "yellow" pine.
"That piece he called yellow pine," said the expert, "was white pine."
Wilents returned to the topic of nail holes.
Q. There has been some testimony here about Hauptmann's nail holes. Prior to the arrest of Hauptmann did you examine the ladder?
A. I did.
Q. Did you make any observations on the nail holes? And what did you see?
A. In 1934 before Hauptmann's arrest, I measured the nail holes.
Q. Where did you measure?
A. I measured the nail holes in the joists in Hauptmann's attic?
Q. They do?
Wilents ended his questioning and Pope began the cross.
Pope inquired:
Q. You are not a practical carpenter?
A. I've done carpentry work but I'm not a carpenter by trade.
Q. Built bird houses and such things, I suppose?
A. I helped my father build houses and barns and with cabinet work.

Q. Have you any experience in forest conservation?
A. Yes I've been out in the woods, lumbering and so forth.
Q. Have you knowledge of millwork is only from observation and study?
A. Oh, I've had a little practical experience.
Pope asked if the markings of the plane on the ladder might not be measured.
Variability of Wood
"It would be exceedingly impossible, practically impossible because of the variability of the wood itself."
Q. But you made not attempt to measure them?
A. I did not. I measured their distance apart by comparison and estimation.
Koehler said he had not taken "three dimensional measurements of the marks on wood, in response to Pope's technical questions. He said he had not measured the "depth" of the marks.
Q. The distance between nick marks would vary with the angle.
A. Yes.
Q. You have never testified before to this sort of thing (tool marks)?
A. No, sir.
Pope raising his voice for the first time, asked Koehler if he had made all his identification of the Hauptmann and ladder plane marks was "purely visual?"
A. Yes, except that I measured the dimensions of the microscopically sold there.
Q. Accuracy has dropped as low as .22. Isn't that a matter of guesswork?
A. Not in the hands of this phenomenal cold spell, fruit, which is unaffected by cold, the price is much higher this year.

Rudy and Defence Counsel Nearly To Blows in Court

New York, Feb. 9—(AP)—What Mayor Rudy Vallee threatened to do Rudy Vallee court drama subsided today, while Justice Salvatore A. Cotillo considered a motion by Vallee's counsel to dismiss his wife's suit for abrogation of their separation agreement.

The proceedings, which have been marked by some caustic verbal exchanges between counsel, were suspended to blow up completely toward the end of yesterday's session, when Rudy himself aimed a blow at the attorney for Mrs. Jane Pickens Webb Vallee. Only the quick intervention by bystanders prevented what might have been a free-for-all.

Rudy's outburst came just after Justice Cotillo announced he would withhold decision on the separation motion until next Wednesday.

Heated argument in the court room table and said to Vallee:

"You're not in the films now."

Rudy, rising, shook his clenched fists, drew back his left hand as if to strike Hamstein, who dodged as several persons in the courtroom came between them.

Justice Cotillo called:

"Order, order."

Then, turned to Justice Cotillo and Hamstein said:

"I was just adjusting my papers, when did gentleman commence work on me and."

"You, he didn't.", remarked the judge, "I saw Mr. Vallee and he didn't sneak up on you."

Rudy's counsel, then, thought court had adjourned. He apologized to Justice Cotillo, but not to Hamstein.

Today after Justice Cotillo reported Benjamin C. Cohen, Rudy Vallee's California lawyer, taking the stand.

"Yes, Mr. California," he said, "I see you have a beard. Have you grown it and you'll probably get enough material for an affidavit."

Cohen replied, "I object to that remark," Cohen shouted.

"I'll like to make this absolutely clear at this trial is over," said Justice Cotillo. "I'd like to meet you somewhere in New Jersey. I can't just across the ferry."

"Anywhere you say, your honor," Cohen answered, "New York, New Jersey or California."

"Throw him out," the court told attendants. "He doesn't belong here."

Cohen left between two officers of the court.

PAY FINAL TRIBUTE TO LATE E. MACMULLEN

Many Friends and Relatives Attend Funeral of one of Stirling's Oldest Residents

Stirling—Many friends and relatives attended the funeral of the late Elijah MacMullen, who passed away at his home in Stirling on Wednesday, Feb. 6, in his 82nd. year. The funeral service was in St. Paul's United Church and was conducted by Rev. E. W. Rowland, assisted by Rev. Dr. Johnston, pastor of the Bancroft circuit, on Friday, Feb. 8th, at two o'clock.

The pall bearers were W. Pilchett, J. West, H. Wickett, P. McKee, S. Hallam and C. Linn. Interment was in Stirling cemetery.

Elijah MacMullen enjoyed the splendid program by the Carolina Jubilee Singers on their return engagement in Stirling, which was under the auspices of St. Paul's Sunday School. An outstanding feature of the programme was the rendition of "Old Black Joe", as a baritone solo by Daniels Daniels. He took his audience back with him to the early days on the Mississippi portraying in a marvelous way the shackled down condition of dark skinned but white boss. It was truly a work of art. Other solos quartettes and choruses served to make the evening a real treat to music lovers.

In a letter received by Mr. R. Patterson from Mr. Ben Hagerman, who is spending the winter in Florida the writer states that the weather is unusually cold there. The mercury has dropped as low as 32. Ben says that he is enjoying the luxuries of this phenomenal cold spell, fruit, which is unaffected by cold, the price is much higher this year.

Labatt London, Ont., Brewer, now David Metzner has been convicted and given fifteen years imprisonment.

"The information I had heard in Church in Albany, N.Y., an "Ontario Brewer" was to be kidnaped by a Detroit gang," he said. "I was actively in the search for the kidnapers and on Canadian side of border, and after the brewer had been kidnaped and returned, he searched the Detroit police department searching the descriptions given by witnesses and picked out a group which included Meisner and Albert Pegram, who is still sought.

"The United Detective said "he thought the correspondence with the Canadian authorities would show the first tangible clues in the kidnaping and that he himself had stated he would make application for the reward to Major-General V. A. S. Williams, head of the Ontario Provincial Police.

MORE AND FISHER WILL BE SAINTS

Martyrs of King Henry Eighth Will Shortly be Canonized

Vatican City,•February 9.—Canonization of the Blessed Sir Thomas More, famous English statesman, and both beheaded by order of Henry VIII in 1535, was made certain yesterday when the Vatican announced that a formal decree recognizing their martyrdom will be promulgated Sunday.

The eventual dual canonization will be a response to recent requests by more than 200,000 Catholics, in Canada, England, Ireland, the United States, British India and other countries, that the two be included in the Catalogue of Saints.

Besides the two English martyrs, recommendations were addressed that a formal decree be issued in many Catholic colleges.

The Holy Father was reported greatly impressed by these requests, most of them received during Holy Year, when British Catholic pilgrimages to Rome were exceptionally numerous. The future canonization of the two men is accordingly interpreted in some Catholic circles as Britain's reconciliation of a rent-1 of the Catholic Church.

Among the requests for canonization of Sir Thomas More and John Cardinal Fisher were a number from Cambridge and Oxford professors, Vatican archives revealed, and letters were also sent to the Pope from Catholic laymen. These 200,000 letters were submitted to the Consistorial Congregation and discussed individually studied by the Consistorial section of the Vatican.

Formal investigation will discuss the canonization February 19 and consistory will be held May 17 at which immediate canonization could be decreed, canonization is expected in May.

Sir Thomas More, British statesman and author was born in London in 1478. When Cardinal Wolsey fell in 1529 More was appointed Lord Chancellor. He disapproved of the divorce of Henry VIII from Catherine of Aragon, and resigned. When subsequently he refused to acknowledge the head of the new English Church, More was imprisoned and executed.

John Fisher, born in 1459, in Yorkshire, was Bishop of Rochester for 30 years. He, too, was imprisoned against the divorce of Henry VIII. He died while in prison with More for refusing to recognize the monarch's authority in matters spiritual. In 1535 Pope Paul III made him a Cardinal. This did not save him, however, from execution.

TAX DELINQUENTS RECEIVE SUMMONS

Local police authorities are kept busy these days endeavoring to enforce various city bylaws. Besides the usual highway traffic duties there is the dog tax to be collected and the serving of the yearly court summons to poll tax delinquents is also the hands of the police authorities.

To date there have been 61 dog tags issued for 1936, about one-tenth of the number issued during 1935. Summons to 53 poll tax defaulters yesterday personally distributed 53 court summons, as to poll tax delinquents. Should they be formed to appear in the local police court charged with the non-payment of their poll tax. A general increase of assessed poll tax exemptions rapidly tending their way towards the city hall, and the city treasurer's office today.

Spite Wife

by Ann Forester

Important and self-centered though they had all been, these three women had adored the handsome, wilful son and brother. They wept copiously all through the ceremony. Judy alone stood pale and dry-eyed, one arm held by Mrs' Carter's desperate clutch, the other hand in Mary's firm clasp.

Judy stayed on in the big Lockwood house. It was a house of ghosts. No longer would one see Madame leaning on Martha's arm going up to her third floor kingdom. One was reconciled to that . . . But impossible to believe that the front door would not burst open and Stan tall and handsome,: would not go flying up the stairs. . . The sound of a motor starting in the driveway, brought a picture of Stan in plus-fours and sweater, on his way out to the Country Club. The drawing room, shadowy, now the shades were drawn over the long French windows and the furniture covered with dust slips, conjured up the memory of many lively parties—of Stan bending over Eunice on the Chesterfield . . . .

Only when Mrs. Carter broke down completely and was ordered to Santa Barbara, did Judy repack the two suitcases she had hastily packed to come down here. Almost humbly Vera asked her to go south with them. "You've been mighty sweet to Mother, Judy .I suppose there have been times when we—we might have seen your side of it more. I'm sorry about that. I think we all are. even to Amy. And you've been lovely to us in—in all thus . . ."

An astonishing admission from the self-righteous Vera. Judy was touched, But refused. Nor would she accept Mary Lockerbee's warm invitation to make an indefinite visit to her house. She wanted to leave Lockwood. Wanted to let this town and all its remembered joys and hopes and sorrows, drop over the horizon of her mind.

A relief, when she at least returned to her own apartment in the city. She had refused Mary's offer to drive her up and stay with her for a few days.

"I have to get used to it some time, Mary. Better jump in with both feet! It's the easiest way in e——rttot toole-.IJ iroe the long run."

"All right, Judy. You're a brave little kid. But promise me one thing—get Martha to come and stay with you. I learned about her yesterday from my nursemaid— Annie and Martha were very friendly. And Annie had a letter from her just last week. She's discontented in her sister's home. And she doesn't like it inland, she wants to come out on the coast. You need a maid, Judy. I'll feel a lot more relieved about you if I know Martha's there to take care of you."

Mary's words, interpreted, meant that Nick would feel a lot more relieved as well.

"All right. I promise," Judy said. After all, it was Madame's money which made it possible to live independently. Madame would like her to take Martha back.

Back again in her own apartment. . . . How quiet and shaded it looked when she unlocked the door and entered. The manager had gathered the month's accumulation of newspapers and mail.

Two letters from Nick . . . Judy took them up and fingered the square, foreign looking envelopes, and her eyes were dark with thought. She had not written to Nick. Somehow she could not write and tell Nick about Stan.

Vera, as the acting head of the family had written. And Judy knew that Mary had written—and had received an answer from him.

Judy put the letters gently down unopened. Not even Nick seemed real now.

She seemed to have entered a twilight country where everything was quiet and grey and a little sad. Outwardly she did as she had always done . . .taking Side-slip —the only unchanged thing in her life—out for a run. Driving the car—but never down on the coast road, where she had gone that dreadful day. Exchanging armsful of books at the circulation library.

She used books as a narcotic. Night after night she read by the shaded lamp over her bed, until the grey light of dawn seeped through the window drapes. She read until shooting pains in her forehead warned her that she must spare her eyes.

Then, hours of staring into the dark, feeling a sense of utter desolation bearing down upon her. Stan, dead, held her as he had never held her in life.

Impossible to believe that Stan was dead! Impossible that such vitality, such arrogant life could be stilled—its fiery ego put out like a candle!

Memory tortured her — recalling pictures . .. That green and gold evening on the river back in Summerfield, when dashing Stan had won her romantic love. That first morning breakfast on the train, when for the first and last time, she had been truly happy, secure in the knowledge of Stan's love, ignorant of the destroying shadow of Eunice Wilson.

Then—that week-end party in the old coast house . . .She had nearly drowned and Nick had saved her. And later —upstairs in the bedroom. Stan, frightened and contrite, holding her close in the dark . . . Oh, if she had only died then, Judy thought desperately now; if the undertow had only sucked her out. . . She would be blessedly at peace instead of lying here, with this unbearable ache at her heart. If it had only been she, instead of Stan, who had been flung over the cliff . . .

A letter from Nick. Frightened because she had not written. She forced herself to answer and the pen seemed to move of its own volition. After all . . . perhaps they should not write any more . . . Things were different. She hadn't meant to change but she had. Or rather, nothing seemed worthwhile doing. She thought she had loved Nick . . .maybe she had, but love was a word without meaning to her now. Let things drift . . .

Strange, thought Judy as she sealed and mailed this with a steady hand, that when Stan was alive she would have gladly fought for a divorce to free her for Nick, and now that the way was no longer barred all desire had gone from her. Even as he had taken from her in life—her faith and her girlhood dreams and her unquestioning loyalty, so in death Stan had stripped her of initiative, of the desire to live.

Martha, the Faithful, gladly accepted the offer to come and take care of the apartment. It was a surprising relief to have her here. Judy was sure she would not have wanted a strange servant around the place, but Martha was like some trusted old friend. She petted and bullied Judy as she had petted and bullied Madame. She shooed her to bed at reasonable hours. She insisted on the girl eating the wholesome meals she cooked. She drove her out to take systematic exercise.

A sense of contentment and well-being spread through the apartment after Martha's arrival. Even Side-slip, after a period of spasmodic dinners on restaurant scraps and delicatessen leave-overs, became sleek and self-satisfied on Martha's T-bone steaks and tasty sautes.

Day, following day . . . And then the day when the doorbell rang imperatively, startling Judy as she lay reading on the Chesterfield.

Martha had gone to market . .. Perhaps she had forgotten her key, thought the girl as she rose to answer.

She opened the door and found herself looking into the face of Nick.

DREAMS of DREAMS

CHAPTER SEVENTY-SIX

Nick, standing in the doorway, looking down at her! Nick — who should be in China!

A moment when a variety of emotions struggled in the amazed girl: Surprise, bewilderment, a sort of saddened dismay . . ., Nick, a visitor from another world, disturbing the gray calm of her days. . .

"May I come in, Judy?" the man asked gently.

"Why. .. of course . . . " She caught at her self-possession. Opened the door wider. "Of course, Nick I—I am surprised!"

It was not until afterward that Judy realized he had not kissed her in that first moment. With that delicate tact he had read her mood.

An awkward pause when he had followed her into the room and sat down on the Chesterfield. Nick . .. looking so aggressively masculine in this woman-ruled apartment!

He seemed thinner, to Judy, but as brown and vital—as suggestive of the sun and wind and far places as ever. In contrast the apartment seemed small and stuffy, almost fussily feminine.

The first awkward moments were smoothed over by Side-slip, who had roused from his nap in the kitchen and now came suspiciously investigating. One cautious sniff at Nick's trouser cuff and the apartment echoed to joyous yelps as Side-slip recognized his master.

It proved a welcome diversion. By the time Nick had defended himself against the ecstatic onslaught of the dog, the strangeness of the meeting was over.

Laughing; her pale face flushed, as it had not been flushed for months, Judy was sitting on the floor, her arms around the quivering terrier. She looked, Nick thought, less like the white wraith who had opened the door—more like the charmingly natural girl he had first met in Lockwood so long ago.

"Well, at least I get a whole hearted reception from one quarter," Nick said.

The color in the girl's face deepened. "You're so—sudden! To open the door and find you there —when I expected you were in China! When did you get back?"

"This morning. I came here direct, Judy."

Again that curious little constraint between them. Judy released Side-slip and brushed herself off. She sat in an armchair opposite Nick.

After a moment Nick forced himself to speak. "You didn't write, Judy. You didn't answer my last letter."

"I—— couldn't Nick."

"Poor little kid. You've gone, through a lot."

She shook her head as though to keep the sudden tears from her eyes. "Oh, it's not me! Don't think of me! It's . . . " She stopped, confronted again by the strange and terrible fact of Stan's death.

"I knew it wasn't a thing to talk over in letters," Nick answered. "I wound things up as soon as possible and came over here. Caught the steamer by the skin of my teeth. I have to go back —next week. And, Judy, I came to take you back with me——"

Nick had not meant to say that just then. Mary had warned him in her last letter. "You must be very tender and very gentle with Judy—" Mary had written. "She is like one walking through a bad dream."

Now the man marvelled at the aptness of Mary's description. There was a haunted look in the girl's eyes and the shocked white hush of a dream in her face.

Silence after Nick spoke. Judy sat eyes lowered, pulling one of Side-slip's ears gently. Then she raised her eyes and the man saw that they were filled with tears.

"Nick . . .. please try to understand. . . . I can't go back with you. That was why I stopped writing. I didn't want to hurt you . . . but everything's different."

Nick leaned forward in his chair. His grey eyes were very dark. "No, Judy. Everything isn't different. I'm the same. Everything is really the same—but you're changed."

She made a helpless little movement with her hand. Nick added hastily.

"Don't think I don't understand, darling. I do. This last year has been ghastly for you. And you're all upset and uncertain now. You need someone else to bear the brunt of things for you, Judy. Let me take care of you, as I've always wanted to do. Ever since I've known you, you've had an uphill fight. Let me look out for you. I'll make you happy."

"Oh . .happy!" Her little breathless laugh was dreary. "I don't expect that, any more, Nick! I don't think I shall ever be happy."

"Once, Judy, you thought you'd be happy if we could only be together."

"I know . . . " her voice was faint "I didn't mean . . to be free like . . . this."

Nick read the horror in her eyes. "Dear, it was inevitable. You have no call to feel the shadow of poor Stan's end. It was—it was just written in the cards, Judy. You had already removed yourself. It mustn't change your life."

She raised steady, sad eyes to his. "But it has, Nick. Don't think it's posing on my part. I feel closer to Stan now than I did when—when he was here. Or, no, that doesn't really explain it. It's as though I had died, too. I feel dead . . . in my heart, Nick. Oh—" Judy broke off in despair, "it sounds so stilted, to put it in words! There was a thing I read once—Swinburne's Garden of Proserpine —did you ever read it, Nick? Part of it goes something like this:

Here where the world is quiet,
Here where all sorrow seems Spent winds and dead waves riot in doubtful dreams of dreams .

My life seems like that, Nick. I've reached the point where even sorrow doesn't really hurt. Everything —even Stan—even you—are just part of the dreams. Dreams of dreams. Like walking through greyness that won't hurt if you walk softly enough."

He frowned. "Then you want me to believe you're afraid to live, Judy? I never thought you were a coward!"

It cost Nick an effort to speak severely to her, so frail, so tired and beaten she looked. Hard to realize that this pale girl was the passionate, rebellious Judy of Lockwood days. The girls he had held in his arms that night in the mountain cabin, and who had given back his kisses with equal fervor. Something of fear rose in Nick's heart. Suppose he had already lost her! Suppose Stan was triumphant— in death.

Sheeta, the panther, chanced to look skyward. There he saw Ska, the vulture, circling above the bush a mile away, downward. As his yellow-green eyes stared intently at the bird, he saw Ska dive and——rise again to continue his ominous circling. In these movements Sheeta knew that on the ground beneath the bird was some dying thing that Ska did not yet dare attack.

Cautiously creeping forward the panther's keen nostrils soon caught the scent of man. Always before, young Sheeta avoided the hated presence of a Tarmangani. But of late he had become more accustomed to it, with the passing of many soldiers—

—through his ancient hunting ground. And Sheeta was hungry. Stalking through the thick bush, presently he was rewarded as his greedy eyes rested gloatingly upon the Tarmangani lying face downward in a narrow game trail.

Little Benny's Note Book

We was eating supper and the telefone rang and it was for ma, and me and pop could hear her tawking, saying O, hello Maud, well I'll see what I can do, I'll ask him after supper, but you know bridge isn't his strong weakness.

It's Mrs. Hews, I bet she wants you to play bridge tonite, pop, I said, and pop said, I bet you bet rite. But while there's hope, and meanwhile, mum's the word, he said.

Meening not to say anything unnecesserry in case it mite not be necesserry, and after super pop started to smoke a cigar behind the paper and ma said, Did you enjoy your supper, Willyum?

I didn't mind it pop said, Well here's a queer bit of news. Here's a story about a woman getting a divorce because her husband slapped her face every time they played bridge together, and it seems the husband got a divorce from a former wife a few years ago because she used to kick his shins at bridge games, pop said, and ma said, If you bleeved everything you saw in the papers, truth would be stranger than fiction.

Here's another item pop said. A couple of bridge fiends were crossing the street argewing some point about bidding and deff and blind to the rest of the world and a taxy driver bore down on them with his nose in a book of bridge rules, and he didn't see them and they didn't see him, and the result is the whole 3 of them are in the hospitile with the bridge of their noses broken, and the docters in the axident wards of the diffrent hospitiles claim that more axsidents are due in bridge than to alcohall, slippery streets, and reckless driving all put together, pop said. And by gollies here's still another strange axsident with bridge as a background, he said.

I dont care to hear it, how about going to a movie tonite, ma said. Being what happened.

B. C. I. CAGERS DEFEAT PICTON IN TWIN BILL

Seniors Come From Behind in Last Half to Win 41-30

JUNIORS WIN

Double Win Puts Both Teams in First Place

Both B.C.I. basketball teams assumed undisputed leadership of their respective groups in the Bay of Quinte group of C.O.S.S.A.' cage competition when the local seniors defeated the Picton collegiate seniors by the score of 41 to 30, while the Belleville Laughlin - coached Juniors walloped home to a 44 to 13 victory over the Picton juniors. It was the third consecutive win of the season by the undefeated B.C.I. juniors, while the seniors moved into first position in their group by handing the Picton squad their initial defeat of the year and replacing them at the top of the group. The last period rally by the local seniors proved most thrilling and assured that game of stealing limelight, of the twin bill played at the local collegiate gym last night before a full gallery of patrons.

A prolific and sustained attack on the part of Coach Laughlin-coached seniors in the last half gave them a 17 to 30 victory over the Picton seniors, the latter having the better of the first stanza play and leading by 4 17 to 13 score at the half way mark. Led by Clarke, their star forward, the Picton tri-colored hoopsters during the B.C.I. game the speediest one of the season's play, sport thrills with the centred and sensational onslaught in the last half. Clarke counting 21 points during the pastime, following in line Wally Hillen who notched 13 local points, many on hard shots from outside the Picton defence zone. The work of Eddie Schrieder and George Forster spinned masterly into the play as they continually fed Clarke with speedy and accurate passes and Forster entered into the ultimate scoring.

Mallet and G. Welsh carried the brunt of the Picton offensive play and looked the best on the floor for the first half of the game with Greer and East also playing well. The speed and combination play set up by the visitors in the first half stamped them a potential winners but they willed badly before the continued offensive attacks of the Laughlin-coached crew in the second stanza.

Local Juniors Win.

In a rather unimpressive game the Local Junior hoopsters added another trend through the motions to down the Picton kids by the score of 33 to 18 in the curtain-raising interscholastic cage fixture. The Picton team showed considerable talent around the baskets and repeatedly missed many open scoring chances as the local crew simply coasted home to victory. Muir, Kikes and Rumsay starred in the basketball for the Laughlin-coached kids at times while Langton led the locals in scoring with nine points, Kikes getting eight. The local juniors failed to improve upon their nonchalant manner of play shown when attempting to down the Picton and when the Picton team pressed. Yarwood, Welsh and Walton led the Picton team who, though they endeavored in vain to register their first victory of the season, were hopelessly out-classed.

LEADERSHIP OF GROUP AT STAKE

Bruins Can Tie Hawks by Winning And Chicago Losing

The battle for leadership of the National Hockey League's American division may be smarted worse than ever after a batch of week-end games that involved all the United States teams into action.

There are only four points separating Chicago, Boston and Rangers now and if Rangers beat Chicago and Boston take Americans in Sunday night's encounter that would give the Hawks on top and the New Yorkers only a game behind.

Nothing of the sort existed in the international section but the week-end activities of the Montreal Maroons offer interesting possibilities. Tommy Gorman's Montreal Canadiens and the Toronto Leafs' occupancy of first place for granted and their two games away being given a long way toward displacing the Montreal Maroons.

They show in Toronto tonight in the battle that is expected to pack Maple Leaf Gardens to the rafters. Torontonians are so anxious to see the first game of the season with Greer and East also playing well. The speed and combination play set up by the visitors in the first half stamped them a potential winners but they willed badly before the continued offensive attacks of the Laughlin-coached crew in the second stanza.

The Leafs will furnish the best line-up until that time on the Santa Anita handicap. It really should be called "The Little Santa Anita".

SAILORS WIN AT HAMILTON

Have Revenge For Four Drubbings This Winter

With the senior O.H.A. schedule drawing to a close, Port Colborne Sailors today had partial revenge on Hamilton Tigers for handing them four for their four consecutive drubbings. Last night the Sailors repaid their tormentors and in a wild third period snapped in three goals to decide the issue, the result failed to change league standings and Port Colborne remains in fifth place.

Toronto All-Stars meantime kept a close grip on their second place honors by defeating a stubborn band of Oakville Villans 5-3.

The high-powered Tiger forward line of Lacombe, Max Bennett and Jackie Forbes broke loose going pretty tough against a highly specialized Sailor defense. Sailors scored twice in the first period and won the game in the third. Bentham, leading the Sailor attack, got two goals.

More than 3,000 fans watched the struggle between Toronto and Oakville. The teams battled at top speed in a fierce game the first fifty minutes but in the weight advantage of the Toronto outfit told in the end. Cotterel and Robinson each scored for Toronto in the last half of the third period to give the homesters a win.

Equipoise Makes Last Bid For Conquest of Lady Luck

Has Been Hampered Throughout Racing Career by Accidents And Injuries

By CHARLES "HORSES" AYRES
Central Press Canadian Writer

Toronto, Feb. 9.—The two most important candidates for the Santa Anita handicap have yet to be seen in action at Santa Anita. They are of course, Equipoise, handicap champion of 1933-33-34, and Mrs. Isabel Dodge Sloane's Cavalcade, last year's champion three-year-old.

These great thoroughbreds have been moving impressively in their morning trials, despite reports to the contrary, their trainers say they are in fine shape.

Equipoise, it is reported, has pulled up a bit clicky after several of his works, and it has been hinted that the old hoof ailment which undoubtedly prevented him from duplicating his Beau Jack record as the world's foremost gleaner, is bothering him.

The seven-year-old son of Pennant-Swinging hasn't shown much in his workouts but his trainer says he'll be at his best for his winter debut. The Pegs starting his "coming out" party in California will be the $75,000 Santa Anita handicap.

In this affair,the handicap champion meets a band of tough, capable and rager-sharp opponents. Among them are Head Play, Jabot, Gallant Boy, Wacoche, Mate, Pitter Pat, Time Supply, Mr. Khayyan, Azucar, Big Bear, High Glee, The Dark, Risk-it-all, Statesman, Fairoso, Pleam, Sarade and Cavalade.

It would do my heart good to see old Equipoise come up to the February stake at his best. The old warrior has had a tough life, really. Had he not developed that blind quarter-crack, he very probably would have piled up a record such as no other horse ever has approached.

Certainly, with Lady Luck favoring him just a little bit, the misery of his triumphs very likely would stand at a dozen or more above the official figure.

Foot Trouble

When you stop and think about this horse, you can't help but marvel. His delicate foot kept him out of racing as a three-year-old and interfered with his program when he was five and six. He's come back stronger after each enforced retirement and that after time has regained top form.

That's something few horses have been able to do. I have a pretty good idea that Equipoise ran in his best form when his bad foot was bothering him.

This son of Pennant really deserves all the glory that has fallen to his lot; he has really earned it. He has had few set-ups and he's overcome all sorts of ailments and stood up well under the hardest kind of training.

I'd like nothing more than to see him wind up his career with a victory in the rich race at Santa Anita and thus climb to first place in the list of money-winners. But it is taking a lot of him a tremendous lot, my friends.

MADOC LOSES TO MARMORA

Score 4-2 And The Hockey Played Not of Best

Madoc, Feb. 9.—(Special)—Madoc Intermediates suffered their second reverse of the season when they were beaten on Wednesday night at the Madoc arena by a score of 4-2 Marmora. It was the worst game of hockey seen in Madoc in some time. Early in the game Referee Cosgrove Coljeens lost control and the contest developed into a game of skinny. Clampton and Stranger of Marmora were the chief offenders. Henderson of Madoc received a bad cut on the face from a high stick, requiring three stitches to close it. It was a game in which everything went. Henderson and Akey scored for Madoc. Shannon was the leading marksman for the visitors.

Madoc — Goal, Nickle; defence, West and Emory; centre, Henderson; wings, Alexander and Akey; subs, Ashley, Clarke, Keller, Noble.

Defenders With Starry Chatham Maroons

Here are two of the outstanding workmen with Chatham Maroons in the Michigan-Ontario amateur hockey league. Interest is to be great around this circuit and the brand of puck-chasing so brilliant that Maroons drew a crowd of 14,000 people when they met the Hoskins-Ford team of Detroit in that city. Left is Lou Sadler, chunky defense player, who is rated one of the best in the league. Right, Fred Reardon, Chatham policeman and goal guardian. Maroons are favored to win senior "B" O.H.A. honors in competition with Windsor Mic Mac and Windsor Motors.

CURRENT SPORT

(Day By Day)

During the regular playing season in the local junior O.H.A. loop home town referees were employed and pressed into service by the various managers following an agreement arrived at at the annual group meeting. When the question of what referees should be employed during the play-offs arose, however, all delegates present amicably agreed to leave that question in the hands of Convener Ed. Thomas, not a dissenting voice being heard. What system of referees will be employed for the play-offs is not known to the play-offs has not been announced, but in fairness to the officials, the players and even to some satisfied fans, neutral referees should be hired for the semi-final series. The cost of employing such an official would be small when set to the satisfaction that would follow.

All of which brings us to the point of controversy, the Napanee-Belleville junior semi-finals to open here on Tuesday night. The last appearance of the Cerow-coached crew here resulted in a decision for the Cats, they fading badly in the overtime to win by the score of 10 to 9. The Thomas-led youngsters returned to form later in the season, however, and administered the only beating assumed by Sam Curry's group last year. Skipper Thomas now charges out to a stiff work-out last night and will be at full strength when they hop over the boards to oppose the Gibbardville lads on Tuesday evening. Coach Cerow introduced a smart junior forward line in the two Jamieson boys, Tompkins, the latter being a Deseronto youth. These lads lend the fancy of a number of fans during the last appearance of the Napanee team here, but providing the Colts play the same brand of hockey against the Gibbardville quintet as they did versus the Tweed aggregation. Manager Thomas should have little worry regarding the ultimate result of Tuesday's game.

In reference to Wednesday night's Peterboro-Belleville game the Lift-lock City sports jotter-down has the following to say to his readers: "In those Belleville-Petes' hockey wars centuries ago, Bobby Benson would be puck-shocked if not killed! But that's the way they played when the Petes won out by the odd margin and there were 36 scored. Think that's a lot, eh? Ha, nothing at all, a mere nothing. Last night in Belleville, the Quinte gang won out by two counters in overtime, and 20 little rubbery discs found their way into the lacework which holds the goal posts together. And yet the gang's contract both net guardians played great games! Yessir, despite the high score both were brilliant. Foley" in particular robbing the homesters repeatedly on close-in hot thrusts on ganging plays. Jeffrey also wasn't handing the Petes a thing."

Due to the fact that outside sport writers are taking a pointed interest in the local basketball situation, perhaps a few words pertaining to basketball in Eastern Ontario may prove interesting, even if not authentic. While others are casting their eyes and ears in our general direction we have been looking far afield and recently learned that a new intermediate league is being formed up to our immediate east and the talk brings together Gananoque, Kingston and Napanee in a new intermediate "A" loop. On paper and verbally this may sound quite feasible, but 'tis doubtful if the sponsors of the diamond pastimes in the Limestone City would even so much as entertain the idea. In 1927 when the C.O.B.L. disbanded for one season, intermediate baseball proved a dismal failure in Kingston and on the other hand why should the Penies field a team good enough to play senior ball and lower its standing to intermediate. Then on the other hand Gananoque accomplished little in the intermediate "B" circles last year, so how could that team support a club in a higher rating, especially as they would be playing versus the last year's intermediate champions and a 1934 senior club in Kingston. "Just don't make sense, 'ats all."

George Laughlin's two B.C.I. basketball squads assumed sole possession of the Bay of Quinte cage supervisive interscholastic cage groups by virtue of a double win over the Picton C.I. squads. The local junior victory failed to impress as the local youngsters assumed the floor in a manner that gave the patrons the idea that they just about what the ultimate result might be, a local victory, and sometimes they walloped the Pictonites previously at home. The senior game, however, made up in no small measure for the lack of thrills in the junior test, as the local seniors forged a hectic last half rally to win one of the most interesting victories seen on a local basketball floor in quite some time. In the first stanza mark the Picton crew led by the score of 17 to 12 and looked by far the better squad on the floor, but once the local seniors started to click it proved little less than a continued parade of basketballs into the Picton cage, the final score being 41 to 30 in favor of the local tri-colored clad youths.

With Clarke and Hilton in the leading scoring roles, George Forster and Eddie Schrieder provided the thrills by making the plays and repeatedly giving Clarke perfect passes that the blonde-thatched youth sunk for a total of 21 points. Mallet, G. Welsh and Wanamaker set up a dizzy pace for the visitors in the initial period and seemed to carry too much speed and scoring ability for the locals, but that first half rally staged by the locals sent the largest crowd of the season of the basketball next week when the last week's juniors and intermediates come to town for a dual bill of E. C. I. A. basketball on Wednesday night at the collegiate. The Queen's intermediates clash with the local "C" quintette while the scrapping leading Deacon A. C. juniors battle the tardy Queen's kids. Then on Saturday night next the heralded Camp Borden juniors will fill into town to do battle with the Belleville "All-Stars".

Sir Malcolm Campbell, RIGHT, discussing with Daytona Beach workmen the advisability of using this machine to lay a line of heavy black oil up the centre of the racing strip over which he will drive his monster Bluebird in an effort to break his own world speed and possibly set a new record of 300 miles per hour. He will probably use the line as a guide instead of the flags which lined the course during his previous test races.

HAUPTMANN CASE MAY GO TO JURY EARLY TUESDAY

Evidence All in And Addresses Will Begin Today

111 WITNESSES HEARD

Mrs. D. Morrow Gives Testimony on Movements of Maid

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 11 (AP) Attorney Richard Hauptmann gratis his last chance Tuesday to convince eight men and four women jurors that he is innocent of the kidnapping and killing of the Lindbergh baby.

The thirtieth day of his trial will open with Prosecutor Anthony M. Hauck, Jr., of Hunterdon County in the chief prosecution role. Tip Hall's task of presenting the formal statement of what the state believes it has proved by its 111 witnesses.

When Hauck has concluded, the defence will begin its summation, chief Defence Counsel Edward J. Reilly of Brooklyn has cast himself for the role. The attorney courts still circulated that Hauptmann himself wished C. Lloyd Fisher of Flemington, young associate defence counsel, and Frederick A. Pope, another of his counsels, to have a share in addressing the court.

Hauck's statesmn mill be comparatively brief. He will present merely the evidence adduced by the state; That Hauptmann possessed nearly $15,000 of the Lindbergh ransom money when he was arrested last September; that eight handwriting experts attributed to his hand the writing in the ransom notes; that the kidnap ladder was not only linked to him through the rungs marks found on the upper and uprights, but that the upright, numbered 16, was part of the attic flooring in his Bronx home.

He will point to the fact that Colonel Charles A. Lindbergh identified Hauptmann's voice as the voice of the man who collected the $50,000 ransom in St. Raymond's cemetery the night of April 2, 1932; that Dr. John F. Condon, Lindbergh's agent, identified Hauptmann as the "John" with whom he talked in Woodlawn cemetery before the ransom payment and at the ransom payment.

Theatre Girl's Evidence

He will lay before the jury Mrs. Cecile Barr's identification of the carpenter as a man who passed a $5 ransom bill through the window of her cage at the Loew's 72nd Street Manhattan motion picture theatre November 26, 1932, nine months before the time Hauptmann first fixed as the

PINE TREE YIELDS BIG DIVIDENDS

Farmer Gets a Bear And Several Gallons Honey From Tree

Eaulaire, Ont., Feb. 11 (CP)— From a single pine tree Henry Burton not only obtained four cords of wood but a hibernating black bear and three gallons of wild honey. He could have had a bee's nest too.

As his axe bit into the pine, Burton noticed what he thought was steam coming from the wood. Cutting deeper he uncovered a bear's den. It was Bruin's breath he had thought was steam. With a growl the bear emerged to be met with two solid blows from Burton's axe which finished him.

Continuing his chopping Burton found a beehive full of fragrant honey. Apparently the bear was making certain he would not come out of hibernation lean and thin.

RESTORE SALARIES OF CITY STAFF SEEMS LIKELY

Permanent Staff Has Been Under Reduction For Two Years

ADJUSTMENTS MADE

Employees Under Other Bodies Are Not Affected

That the salary reduction bylaw governing salaries of the civic permanent staff of the city including firemen will not be re-enacted this year, is the general view which has been gathered from members of the city council, business men and others that the by-law salaries will be restored to their 1932 figure except in cases where the salaries have since been changed as in some cases they have. One member of council said that as far as he was concerned it had been definitely decided to restore salaries paid this year without reductions as applied in the year's of 1933 and 1934. He added that this was the attitude of the council.

Another member stated today that the salary reduction bylaw which had been enacted at the council meeting to the committee may be taken up at the meeting of the committee this week. However, the opinion appeared to be that there is no such intention to repeal the bylaw being put into force this year.

From what the newspapers could learn the motive in the proposed restoration of the cuts in salaries to the officials and employees was with the idea of co-operation with a well-nigh universal and of the general benefit which would result to the municipality.

Two Years

The five bylaws reducing salaries became effective in February 1st, 1933. In 1934 a bylaw extending for 1934 the reductions for 1933 the third year's bylaw was passed. It is this bylaw which has been effective up to the present.

If the bylaw is not passed the salaries are automatically restored to the level of the year 1932, except in the case of some salaries which have since been adjusted. It was said that if the salaries are restored there may be a few adjustments.

"Cuts" have meant a little under $2,000 a month each year to the city.

January 1935 cheques were of course issued with deductions as according to bylaw 3153.

The salaries under the cuts are as following:

5 per cent, on all salaries up to and including $1,200.

7 per cent. on all salaries of $1201 and up to $1800.

10 per cent. on all salaries of $1801 and upward.

The bylaw in question covered the permanent employees of the city, including firemen. Those not affected are those directly under the city council. Employees of other bodies are not affected by the bylaw.

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 11—Reverting to an original contention of an "inside job" counsel for Bruno Richard Hauptmann today accused Reilly Gow and the late Ollie Whalen, two of the Hopewell home that and murder of baby Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr.

Pleading to save Hauptmann from the electric chair as the perpetrator of the crime, Edward J. Reilly of Brooklyn, chief of the defence staff, declared:

"Colonel Lindbergh was blabbed in the back by those who worked for him."

In this connection he flung out the name of Betty Gow, the baby's nursemaid, and charged she was the person entrusted by the Lindberghs who knew the baby was to turn Hopewell on the night of the crime; that she, rather than the Lindberghs who he said had charge of the dog, failed to bark when the baby was taken.

Calls Ladder a Plant

The booming attorney charged the kidnap ladder found under the baby's window was a plant.

"I give you my solemn word, the ladder never left the ground that child out of that crib", he cried. "I give you my solemn word, the ladder never left the ground that child could have crept if a stranger had picked it up. Unless it had been doped.

"Reilly's contention the ladder was a plant, he said:

"There is nothing in the mud to indicate Hauptmann or anybody else fell in that mud and there is nothing in the mud that indicates the baby fell in the mud."

'Judge not' Says Reilly

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 11—Bruno Richard Hauptmann on his 30th day on trial for his life for murder in the first degree in the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh baby, heard Defence Counsel Edward J. Reilly of Brooklyn, chief defence counsel, began his summation after the state had used an hour of its time to declare the contention it had proved "not only beyond a reasonable doubt, but conclusively and overwhelmingly" that Hauptmann was guilty of the crime.

Reilly declared the child would have cried if a stranger had picked it up. Unless it had been doped.

"It is the contention the ladder was a plant, he said:

"There is nothing in the mud to indicate Hauptmann or anybody else fell in that mud and there is nothing in the mud that indicates the baby fell in the mud."

'Judge not' Says Reilly

Flemington, N. J., Feb. 11—Bruno Richard Hauptmann on his 30th day on trial for his life for murder in the first degree in the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh baby, heard Defence Counsel Edward J. Reilly of Brooklyn, chief defence counsel, began his summation after the state had used an hour of its time to declare the contention it had proved "not only beyond a reasonable doubt, but conclusively and overwhelmingly" that Hauptmann was guilty of the crime.

Reilly told the jurors "despite the position and the prestige and the wealth of the Lindbergh family, who find themselves in the position here of being kidnap victims, the final proof in the case according to the law and "not guess work. Not inferences, not maybes and not speeches."

State Is Satisfied

Flemington, N.J., Feb. 11—The state has rested its case today a day it had proved "beyond a reasonable doubt conclusively and overwhelmingly" that Bruno Richard Hauptmann kidnapped and murdered the baby of Col. Charles A. Lindbergh, jr., on March 1, 1932.

Opening for the state unfounded by only 400 mute exhibits and heard by the gray-faced, vulture-eyed prosecutor Anthony M. Hauck, of Hunterdon County, told the jury:

"The State of New Jersey contends they have proven not only beyond a reasonable doubt but conclusively and overwhelmingly, that Bruno Richard Hauptmann is guilty of murder in the first degree. That he is guilty of the murder of the infant, Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr."

The witness stand was overturned and set on its side to support an easel to be used in displaying numerous photographic exhibits to the jury.

Spectator interest was once more back at a high pitch. The courtroom was filled long before convening time and scores who could not gain admission argued and pleaded vainly with the deputies who guarded the doors.

C. Lloyd Fisher, Robert Rosencrans and Frederick A. Pope of the defence staff, examined a piece of plywood, one of the defence exhibits, with a magnifying glass, as court opened.

In a crime of murder, Hauck went on, a corpus delicti must be proven.

"The corpus delicti was the child that on the afternoon of March 1, 1932, Hauck said, was "a normal child. It ate, slept and played as do children."

Kidnap Recital

The earnest young prosecutor recited the events preceding the kidnapping. Betty Gow, the nurse, came to the Hopewell home that afternoon, made a little shirt for the baby, treated it for a slight cold with the aid of its mother and put it to bed.

The baby, he said, was put to bed and its covers were pinned to its crib mattress.

"Now at 8 o'clock Miss Gow will testify she sat at her watch and went downstairs and had something to eat. Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh were downstairs and at one time upstairs in their room.

"At 8 o'clock Miss Betty Gow went back to see how the baby was. She walked over to the crib and listened to hear the breathing.

He paused for a moment.

"That baby was not there."

He sketched swiftly one apprehension that gripped the Lindbergh household then. How the nurses were searched—how Lindbergh grabbed his rifle as he said to his wife: "Anne, they have taken our baby."

Hauck dropped his voice. "It was only a short time later that baby's body was found near the Mt. Rose home.

Hauck then stated the baby had been stolen forcibly. "Yanked from its crib" he declared referred to the mud prints in the nursery and the footprint and ladder marks in the dirt under the nursery window.

The ladder fitted into the marks. The pantie from the window was unmarred and the broken ladder was found nearby.

"All of these things," he declared, definitely, conclusively and overwhelmingly prove that the baby was taken from its crib by this defendant."

Finding of Body

The finding of the body on Mt. Rose Hill, three miles away, May 12, 1932, came next, Hauck went on.

The body was identified conclusively by Col. Lindbergh and Betty Gow and the baby garments clinging to the infant, were recognized.

The defence by its own statement," he asserted, "does not contend that the baby was not killed."

The death, he recited, resulted from a skull fracture and he declared that the jury room "was wired for sound."

Copper wire, covered with green fabric, was strung into the room through a window, apparently installed by someone in the hope of planting a dictaphone and getting a "leak" on the jury's verdict.

$500 AND 250 LBS BUTTER STOLEN FROM CREAMERY

Safe in Office Opened and Cash Box Rifled of Contents

WINDOW ENTERED

$50 And Butter Taken From Refrigerator in Building

Relieved to have gained entrance through a rear window, robbers stole $500.00 in cash and nearly 250 pounds of butter from the premises of the Belleville Creameries sometime Saturday night. The breaks was discovered by Ralph Dudgeon, an employee of the company early Sunday as he returned to the building to attend to the fires.

When investigation by Provincial and local police it was discovered that the robbers had left a well marked trail behind them showing how they apparently entered the premises from a rear window and later opened the large wall safe and removed some $450, from the cash box. The safe was found open, but the bars were drawn so that it was impossible to shut the large steel door. Found on the floor of the office was the empty cash box, that also had been forced open.

The large refrigerator in the building was also pried loose and some $50.00 taken from the butter refrigerator. The large 56 pound boxes of butter were found placed below the rear window, where entrance had been made, apparently to assist the robbers in handing the stolen butter to the window. A number of cuts of the stolen boxes of butter was found by the police lying in the snow at the rear of the building, where it apparently fell as the thieves were making a hasty retreat.

Other offices in the upstairs of the building were also ransacked with a small safe in the upper office being opened, but nothing of value being taken. Every room in the building was ransacked and thoroughly examined for the robbers. No disturbances however, were heard by nearby neighbors during the night. Butter boxes were found strewn about the main part of the building and a trail of clues led straight to the rear window, which claimed the robbers apparently gained entrance. A large quantity was found lying in front of the refrigerator door, it being believed that this hatchet was used in breaking the padlock from the refrigerator door. What mystified the authorities, however, is the fact that the combination on the safe door had been locked, after the doors had been opened.

Provincial and local police are investigating.
